PROSPECTS OF PEACE.

An Armistice Asked for by Russia—Italy and Austria Join in the Demand—Recognition in Berlin of the United States Dispatches—Thiers Off on a Secret Mission.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Paris is cheered this morning by a rumor that Russia is insisting on an armistice, also that the United States has interposed and sent these decided dispatches to Berlin. [This intelligence was received from the TIMES Paris correspondent on Sunday, and published in the TIMES of yesterday.] It is said the Prussian advance has been stopped in consequence.

APPOINTMENTS—THE NEW ASSEMBLY.

Among the new appointments are those of two young men employed on journals at 20 and 30 francs per month, who have been named Prefects. Political meetings are announced for next week to bring forward candidates for the new Assembly. GAMBETTA goes to the provinces to stimulate resistance.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—GARIBALDI is expected in Paris. The Telegraphic Bureau in Paris has begun to receive private telegrams for transmission. The Times, this morning, says France has been cured of military delusion. The Paris correspondent of the Times says a stubborn defense of Paris is certain, if the city is besieged. The idea that the Prussians will walk in without difficulty has entirely vanished.

THE ADVANCE.

Severe Fighting Before Toul—The Prussians Occasionally Repulsed with Great Loss—The Fleet Repulsed at Montmedy—The Town in Fire—King William's Report.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—The Ministry has just made public the following important intelligence:

The Prussians attacked Toul, on Saturday, at 5 o'clock in the morning, and persisted until 9 in the evening. They were, however, constantly repulsed and many of their batteries dismounted. More than 10,000 Prussians were placed hors de combat. Verdun continues to hold out against the enemy. At Montmédy, on Thursday, the garrison splendidly repulsed a Prussian attack.

PROGRESS WITHIN NINE MILES OF PARIS.

The Prussians have surrounded Meaux. They have arrived in force at Creçy, and are approaching Notre-le-Grand. [The places mentioned here are small villages, suburbs of Paris to the east and north-east. Meaux is twenty-five miles from Paris; Crecy about the same distance, and Notre-le-Grand only nine miles.]

PARIS, Sept. 13—A. M.—It is stated that Marshal BAZAINE made a successful sortie.

THE LAON AFFAIR.

BERLIN, Sept. 12—4 P. M.—The following dispatch from the King to the Queen has been received, dated 10 o'clock Sunday night:

"The citadel of Laon exploded after its surrender, just as the Prussians were preparing to enter. Three hundred and fifty men were killed, including 300 Mobile Guards. Many were shockingly mutilated. WILLIAM of Mecklenburg was wounded. There must have been treason."

THE ARMY AT A STAND STILL.

LONDON, Sept. 12—Noon.—The Prussian Army has halted twenty-five miles from Paris, at the special request of BISMARCK, to consider the Russian-Austrian proposition for an armistice.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—The successes at Toul and Montmédy, together with the reported halt in the enemy's advance, have led to more activity on the Bourse, and considerable buying on speculative account.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Prisoners Taken at Sedan—McMahon's Defense—His Plans Interfered With by Palikao—The Emperor Treated as the Honored Guest of Prussia.

BERLIN, Sept. 12.—The official report of the capitulation of Sedan states that the total number of prisoners taken is 120,000. The crowd of wounded has been reduced since the reopening of the railways; and all the dead in the fields around the city have been buried.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—It is asserted that MCMAHON wished to retreat from Sedan to Paris, but was prevented by PALIKAO's orders. He will justify himself to the public when he has recovered from his wounds. Four Generals, one Colonel and five commandants have been sent to a German fortress for refusing to sign the capitulation at Sedan.

THE EMPEROR.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The Prussian authorities surrounded the Emperor's journey to Wilhelmshöhe with exquisite delicacy of care and provision for the dignity and feelings of the prisoner. Advices from Cassel say that nothing in the magnificent treatment of NAPOLEON would denote that he is regarded as a prisoner. He seems rather the honored guest of Prussia. Gens. DOUAY and LEBRUN attend the Emperor at Wilhelmshöhe.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 12.—The Empress EUGENIE, while on her way to England, remained concealed three days in the environs of this city.

ATTEMPT TO COMMUNICATE WITH METZ.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—It is reported that 800,000 francs have been offered for a messenger who will succeed in communicating with the commander of Metz. One man who undertook the service has been shot by the Prussians.

Postponement of the Departure of Government Officers for Tours—Fortification of French Cities—Movements of Iron-clads.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Dispatches just received here from Paris state that the departure of certain members of the French Government for Tours has been indefinitely postponed. The Paris Gaulois also states that the diplomatic body have postponed their departure.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—The supreme tribunals of law have removed to Tours, where they are now in session.

CITIES TO BE FORTIFIED.

LONDON, Sept. 12, P. M.—Orders have been issued by the Government at Paris for the fortification of Havre, Marseilles, Dunkirk and other ports. The quotas of men of the large French war steamers are to be filled to the utmost, and the vessels held ready to weigh anchor at a moment's notice.

QUEEN RUMORS.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Among the rumors from Paris is one that a large deposit of needle-guns has been found in the city; and another, that a subterranean passage has been discovered extending from the heart of the capital to a point beyond the fortifications.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Six French iron-clads were seen off the Goodwins this morning. Their course was south-west.

PASSAGE OF CORSAIRS THROUGH THE STRAITS.

MARSEILLES, Sept. 12.—ESQUIROS, hearing that two corsairs had passed through the Straits of Gibraltar, has ordered armed preparations to be made here to repel any attack. Twenty thousand volunteers left here yesterday for Paris. The Municipal Council has unanimously declared that relatives of corporations must participate in the national defense.

The Republic and the United States—Minister Washburne Closeted on the Subject—Sympathy in Spain for the New Government.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—Mr. WASHBURNE, today, while on the way to the Central Telegraph Office to send a dispatch, was recognized in front of the building by the crowd. Cheers arose, the crowd increased, and the Minister received a most enthusiastic ovation. Mr. WASHBURNE was much moved. This evening the employes of the telegraph companies and many others assembled in front of the American Legation, and made another demonstration in honor of the Government of the United States and its representative.

MADRID, Sept. 12.—Demonstrations of sympathy with the French Republic continue in the northern provinces. Republicans in this city have signed an address demanding the convocation of the Cortes.

A New Prussian Loan—The War Not Anti-Catholic.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Agents have arrived here from Berlin, who, it is anticipated, are seeking to place a Prussian loan on the market.

BERLIN, Sept. 12.—M. DE LEDOCHOWSKI, Archbishop of Gnesen and Posen, has issued a circular denying that the war on the part of Prussia is in any way Anti-Catholic.

Grand German Meeting in Buffalo—Aid for the Wounded.

BUFFALO, Sept. 12.—The German celebration here today, to raise funds for the benefit of the wounded and the widows and orphans in the fatherland, was a great success. An immense military and civic procession paraded the principal streets, with music and banners, to the public park, where a large concourse of people of all nations assembled to witness the addresses, German poems, singing, and other festivities, occupied the day. In the evening there was a grand illumination and display of fire-works.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—The receipts of the German Sanitary Festival, for three nights, have been $20,000.

CITY WAR NEWS.

The French National Subscription.

With a view of giving a new impulse to the French national subscription in aid of the wounded and crippled soldiers of France, the French Committee have called a public meeting of the French residents, to be held at the Apollo Rooms, corner of Broadway and Twenty-eighth-street, on Thursday. A special committee at Dubuque, Iowa, has transmitted, through M. NADEL, of that city, a remittance of $141 to the Committee, which had been raised independent of the Société Française d'Assistance Mutuale, of that city, which is very active in the collection of funds. A "Swiss friend" of the French nation, at Atlanta, Ga., has contributed a bale of cotton to the collections of bandage material by Mlle. OTHILIE BONISSON, of this City, who is vigorously continuing her patriotic efforts in this direction.

The German War Fund Collections.

The German Patriotic Aid Society at College Point, of which Mr. AD. POTTERBURGH is the President and Mr. C. F. ACKERMACH Treasurer, yesterday transmitted to Mr. SAUER, the Treasurer of the General Relief Fund in this City, $1,000 raised by the Germans at College Point, in addition to $2,172 33 transmitted previously to the Consul-General. These contributions are very liberal when it is considered that many of the German merchants residing at College Point are also contributing toward the collections in this City. The Committee is composed of Messrs. JOHN BEHEN, DR. F. W. REITERS, HERMAN FUNKE, and H. CASSEL.

The native of Cologne of Twenty-seven residing in this City computed their organization at a meeting at No. 157 Fourth-street, when Mr. SCHNEIDER, of the Teutonia, was elected President, and PHILIP CARIO, Vice-President; ANTON WEIDMANN, of the Turnverein, Treasurer, and CARL WERZ, of the Mozart Verein, Secretary. The object of the society is to collect funds in aid of the sanitary corps at Zweibruecken. During the few days that this society has been in existence great progress has been collected.

A German literary association, known under the name of Forthildungs Verein, has resolved itself into a patriotic aid association for the upper part of the City, and has already collected a considerable sum in aid of the general fund. Prof. HONSELER, Jun., it is reported, that the collections among the Germans there have reached the sum of $447 50, and are progressing. Several hundred dollars have also been collected in the neighboring town of Shelbyville.

Brooklyn German War Contributions.

The German societies of Brooklyn have collected and forwarded $600 to the General Committee of New-York for the aid of the widows and orphans of soldiers killed during the present European war.

THE POSITION OF ENGLAND.

Intervention and Mediation—Pseudo Albion—A Sharp Criticism of English Neutrality.

Translated from the Courrier des Etats Unis, Sept. 12.

We attach no more importance than is necessary to the rumors of intervention or of mediation which are now in circulation. Nevertheless, these rumors, whether true or false, are based either on the interests, the logical tendencies or the position of the different European Powers. Thus, for instance, it is certain that far Russia, for Austria, and for the other nations of the Continent, the continued extension of the Prussian influence is both a threat and a danger, while at the same time the excessive weakening of France treated as a subordinate Power, is one which all should feel interested in preserving. It is, then, quite natural that the European Powers should feel inclined to interpose their moral influence at least in order to limit Prussian pretensions, and we are not astonished to find their diplomacy still engaged in the attempt to moderate for us the consequence of our defeats. In this sense, then, Russia, Austria and Italy are at present the friends of France. England stands in exactly an opposite relation, and she should be—and is—as she always has been, our bitter enemy. And we do not pretend to be surprised at the wild hour of dancing, wishing that those dances may be increased and seeking to avert the friendly hands which may be extended toward us. It is proved that not only does she refuse to participate in the attempts at mediation which the other Powers seek to make, but also that she attempts to discourage them by hostile maneuvres. England, in fact, is not over-anxious to see a peace too soon concluded between France and Germany. She must have counted on a prolonged struggle, which would so exhaust the belligerent nations as to render them incapable of contesting her maritime and commercial superiority. To speculate on ruins is her political maxim, and the occasion was altogether too propitious to prevent her from founding bright hopes thereon. A speedy peace would then dissipate these illusions, and it would be with a feeling of pride and grief that she would regard the possibility of an understanding between France and Germany, which might yet be sincere if the latter proved generous in her terms of peace; an understanding, too, which would not be confined to these two nations, but in which would be also implicated those other nations which might have taken part in effecting it.

Today, then, England is offended at the steps which have been undertaken to shorten the war; and it is not only on whom she wounds by her underhand dealings, demonstrating an implacable perfidy, but she exasperates all Europe and outrages humanity. It is impossible for a nation to long carry such a burden—let us rather say such a crime—without the coming of a day of retribution. England's egotism is proverbial, and no one would regret to see her pay the penalty for it at the proper time; perchance the time is not far distant, and the whole world will rejoice at its arrival. Let the Irish be patient! Nothing can so much aid in making friends for them as this position of their rulers, and, so far as we are concerned, it only serves to increase our sympathy for them. We are glad to give them this assurance on the very day when they make a brilliant demonstration in favor of our country. At their happy meeting we guarantee that the wish will be unanimous for the speedy coming of that day when we can hail their independence, as they today salute our liberty.

Friends—England and France in History—England's Ingratitude—Europe's Obligations to France.

Translated from Le Siècle, Aug. 12.

It is in the time of trouble that we discover our friends. France, which has done so much for civilization, appreciates this truism today. Of those whom she has saved, raised or maintained, not one seems to reflect on the past or on the future. Most assuredly do we believe that our country will rise again. Nations are indestructible, and we do not imagine that our safety is dependent on any one. But even if France were really crushed, we would ask, what would become of Europe? Has the Rhine, which rests at our expense, forgotten that without our aid the sovereignty of the East would have been transferred to Russia? England alone could hardly have obtained it, and in order to prevent her from meeting with a serious disaster in the Crimea, the assistance of our army and of our fleet was necessary. Nor is that all. What supports England? Her commerce; yet her capital is mingled with ours, and she feeds our market much more than we feed hers. Our credit is firm. The success of a loan, taken in time of war, without any begging, but by the force of patriotism alone, proves this beyond a doubt. We will find and find as man, financial support as ours, for common operations? Is it in Germany which has no finances, and never will have? The House of HOHENZOLLERN will leave her stripped and despoiled. All this the origin of the City of London forgets. It forgets also that the navy is not yesday's power sufficient to carry the fortune of a nation. The Romans have conquered England before this. The thought of humbling English pride seems cheap to the Germans should they be victorious. Can you imagine the eleven hundred thousand men of the German Armies making a descent on England? What would become of British pride then, and would the Times feel particularly happy in having to fight a million of greedy Germans?

One should never rejoice at the misfortunes of a neighbor. There is a reciprocal liability between nations as well as between individuals. Today it is here, to-morrow there. England was endangered in its Indian Empire before Queen VICTORIA's visit to Cherbourg. Had France not lent her flag to the millions of rebellious Indians, where would her Empire there be today? England's greatness is cemented by a single thread—only on the friendship of America, sending an ally in the rope, for example, or on another revolt in Ireland. Let us ask Queen VICTORIA if it strikes with the heavy hand of a nation which has been generous enough to forgive periodical wars and numerous treasons. We may say as much to the few journals, in countries under obligations to France, which rejoice at her misfortunes. They are not alone in this, but that is great success, could we have one, would disturb her considerably. All the entity she has she owes to us. Let the powerful arm which has sustained her be withdrawn and she has everything to fear from European intrigues. Ancient monarchies have no particular affection for parvenu monarchies and are constantly plotting some evil against these latter. If the common talk with reference to the nature of Belgian neutrality should be warranted by the facts, it would prove a greater misfortune for Belgium than for us. Only those who know how to compel respect, respect security. The remembrance of 1830 ought never to be forgotten by the Belgians.

Whatever may happen, this is an important time for all the world. Come what will, France will come forth victorious from all her trials. Then will she forget neither friends nor foes. She will seek to avenge herself in the hecatomb invincible. One learns wisdom by experience. For fifty years we have been of service to nearly all Europe. We have aided Greece, Belgium and Italy. We have opened to humanity the walled-in world of China. These benefits, unrecognized in the general tendency of the Europe of today, will wise, and the punishment of the ungrateful will spring naturally from our desertion.

BOSTON.

Opening of the Globe Theatre—Mr. Fechter, Mr. J. W. Wallack and Miss Leclercq in "Monte Cristo"—A Brilliant Assemblage and a Finished Performance.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Monday, Sept. 12, 1870.

The Globe Theatre, which has heretofore been known as Selwyn's, was opened to-night for the season of 1870-71, by a superb performance of "Monte Cristo,"—Mr. FECHTER's own adaptation from DUMAS' novel—and before an audience that included a goodly proportion of Boston's beauty and wit and wisdom. The occasion has long been looked forward to by all interested in theatrical affairs with the highest anticipations of pleasure, and it is safe to say that the most sanguine have suffered no disappointment. The attractions were certainly great, the chiefest among them being the first appearance of Mr. FECHTER in a theatre which, as it is given out, he will himself manage for the next three years. The debuts of Mr. J. W. WALLACK and Miss CARLOTTA LECLERCQ, and the reappearance of Mrs. F. S. CHANFRAU, helped to swell the audience to its vast proportions. The Tri-lingual Tragedian, as Mr. FECHTER was rather contemptuously called by some of your New-York critics, has a powerful hold upon the esteem of the play-goers of this city, won by the genius of the actor—not, as envious and uncharitable pens have delighted in repeating, by the unstinted, and, perhaps, injudiciously warm, praise of his friend, Mr. DICKENS. The first part of his engagement at the Boston Theatre last Spring was only a succès d'estime, but when he left us for your French Theatre he had set the town wild over his Ruy Blas and his Claude Melnotte. His reception to-night showed that his popularity has lost nothing since his last appearance. Everybody seemed almost frenzied with delight as the stout, but not ungraceful figure came forward upon the stage; the common restraints that govern public assemblies were quite forgotten in the presence of the great actor, and round upon round of applause greeted his entrée. The ladies were quite as demonstrative as the gentlemen, making their dainty gloves and snowy handkerchiefs do good and cheerful service in joyful and generous recognition. As the play progressed the enthusiasm seemed to increase, and every manifestation of approval and commendation which was possible of expression was showered upon the chief actors in the drama. Mr. WALLACK invested the part of Noirtier with all the daring and dashing qualities that DUMAS gave to the original, appearing, of course, to his best advantage. Miss LECLERCQ, as Mercedes, gave her admirers additional proof of her rare powers as an actress, creating out of very little a character of great interest, and representing it with a sustained power and a delicate finish that was more delightful to witness. Mrs. CHANFRAU's part was not an important one so far as the action of the drama was concerned, but her skill and beauty added materially to the success of the performance.

The setting of the play was truly magnificent. It is doubtful if anything more satisfactory and more effective has ever been seen on the Boston stage than the two scenes representing the Port of Marseilles and the Chateau of If, and their merits was duly recognized and complemented by the audience.

The new act drop, concerning which great expectations had been formed, was a disappointment. It was a draped curtain merely, after the French style and was very tame and uninteresting.

At the end of the fourth act Mr. FECHTER was called before the curtain and greeted with loud cries of "FECHTER!" "FECHTER!" and, in response to the ovation, he said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I cannot hope, I shall not attempt thus in the middle of a drama, to make a speech. I have not the words at command to express my gratitude for your kindness. I can merely bow my thanks. But I wish to tender my thanks, and I ask you to tender yours to the big-hearted man who has opened his purse so liberally in the interests of art. I name the proprietor, ARTHUR CHENEY.

Mr. CHENEY was thereupon loudly called for, and on his appearance was cordially and heartily applauded, after which the performance proceeded quietly to its close. OATHAM.

Westchester County Fair—Opening of the New Floral Hall.

The opening of the annual exhibition of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Westchester County, in their grounds, near the village of White Plains, was inaugurated last evening by a grand reception in the new floral hall, just completed at an expense of $6,000. The building is a handsome frame structure 100 feet long by 50 wide, two stories high; the upper one being finished off with a gallery 16 feet wide, running round the entire building. Around the lower floor and galleries substantial tables have been constructed for the display of vegetables, fruits, flowers, &c. In the centre of the main floor a fountain has been erected and will be kept in full play during the Fair. The new hall is brilliantly lighted with gas and presents a cheerful appearance. But a limited quantity of farm produce was sent in for exhibition yesterday, but by this evening it is believed that a good show will be made. In addition to the new Floral Hall a fine building in the French style of architecture has been erected for the officers of the Society. New entrance gates have been erected at the south-western corner of the Fair grounds.

The ball opened about 8 o'clock. The Second Regiment Band discoursed some favorite airs while the crowd was gathering. Dancing was kept up till a late hour.

EUROPEAN MAIL NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE TRIPOLI AND CITY OF BROOKLYN.

The mails of the Cunard Steam-ship Tripoli, from Liverpool Aug. 30, and Queenstown Aug. 31, were received in this City from Boston last night. At a late hour, the mails of the City of Brooklyn, from Liverpool Sept. 1, and Queenstown Sept. 2, were reported due. The freshest news from these sources is later by five days than that received by the Java, on Tuesday last.

THE ARMIES.

Von Moltke on the French Troops.

An interesting letter appears in the Salut Public, of Lyons, relative to the instructions which Prussian and French officers are respectively obliged to ponder. The writer says: "MOLTKE is supposed to have adopted tactics which are not new; namely, to act above all with his artillery, said to be formidable, and to spare his men as much as possible. NAPOLEON I., of whom Gen. DE MOLTKE is fully the pupil, never proceeded otherwise. It was who first recognized the great concentration of troops by rapid marches. M. DE MOLTKE, his fervent admirer, has always manifested the greatest contempt for our strategy. I remember having heard quoted some of his very worst sarcasms. A French officer, on a visit to Berlin: 'Do not talk to me of your military education in Africa. If you have never been there, so much the better; when you become General you will be glad of it.' The war we have been carrying on for forty years against the Arabs is, in the estimation of an inferior order. Never any skillful marches, no feints, no counter-marches, rarely any surprises. With that school you will do nothing more than form other schools like it. The first great war will demonstrate your inefficiency, and were I not in the presence of a man of your merit, Sir, I should not hesitate to laugh at your ignorance of the rods to which you devote your pupils. Among you—do not deny it—a pioneer is almost a ridiculous person, and in general the working man is one of mean intelligence. Here, on the contrary, the most conscientious studies are in the order of the day; and the lowest Captain knows as much as the staff officers who are so brilliant in the ball-room. Have you even a superficial smattering of the elements of the military art on leaving your special schools? 'Come now,' continued Gen. DE MOLTKE, taking the other by the hand, 'I will wager that you do not know what is the most valuable piece of furniture for the chamber of an officer in garrison. Come with me.' So saying, the old Prussian led his interlocutor into a small bed-chamber suited to a Sub-Lieutenant; a small bed without curtains, three straw chairs, shives of which fell from the floor to the roof, and in the middle of the room a black wooden board on an easel, the ground strewed with morsels of chalk. 'It is with this that we beat our adversaries every morning,' murmured the old tactician, who was destined to give afterward no severer blows to Gen. FRONSARD, the professor of the Prince Imperial. 'And for drawings, here is all we want,' and M. DE MOLTKE exhibited some geographical maps. What a singular conversation, when one thinks that it took place in March, 1870, for I copy it literally from a letter in my hand at the time of month. What say we not have to say about the lessons to be derived from it? We shall profit by them at a later period."

Composition of the Hosts—Their Manner of Fighting.

From the London Times, Aug. 30.

Something remains to be said of the composition of the rival armies and of their manner of fighting. Man for man, the average French soldier is fully equal to the average German. There are tall, strapping fellows from several districts in both countries—Brandenburgers and Pomeranians on one side, and Normans and Auvergnats on the other. These may be set the one against the other, taking with their physical force the equality of the two armies ends. Beyond a doubt the German, and especially the Prussian soldier, is far more intelligent than his French antagonist. Some people have been taught to laugh at the pedantry of Prussian military education. They were a race of bookworms, and the "dash" of the French would tread these worms into the dust. But this nation of bookworms has brought into the field, for the first time, perhaps, in military history, an educated soldier, whose deliberate valor is perfected by the intelligence with which he avails himself, not only of every colon of "vantage" in the field, but of the very improved weapons of which only an intelligent soldier can make full use. This it has been that, though, perhaps, the Chassepot is a better arm than the needle-gun, the French infantry have shown that it is in their hands no better of the two, and of their rivals' hands. The battle must be long indeed out of which the Prussian soldier will not bring many of his sixty rounds of ball-cartridge. About forty is the most they are ever expected to expend. But in the recent contests the French have, over and over again, fallen short of ammunition at most critical moments, after scarcely eighty rounds, the reason being that they fire away their ammunition at absurd distances, while the Prussians are taught to husband it for shorter distances, and never, if possible, to throw it away to random shots. With them, indeed, every bullet may be said to have its billet, and for the accuracy of their aim let those 731 French corpses answer which were taken out of their rifle-pits at Fange, all shot through the head. Again, it may be said that the present campaign, so far as it has gone, has avenged the old classical system of warfare against the Gallic style of fighting by the frantic efforts of corps d'élite which had sprung up among the French, owing to their Algerian campaigns. The French line has been neglected for these favored bodies, while the German forces are remarkable for great uniformity of efficiency all through the army. It is, therefore, able to act as one with much greater effect in masses, and their method of warfare is neither desultory nor spasmodic, but regular and overwhelming in its advance, as though the whole army were one great machine acting in perfect order. As for the officers, it is said they have cost the Empress to refuse it, as Regent no other course was open to her. Mercy could not be extended to the enemy's spy while the enemy himself was on French soil and French blood was being shed in torrents on the battlefield. According to the order was given that the sentence should be carried out. At this morning HARTE was awakened in his cell in the military prison in the Rue du Cherche Midi by a messenger, who announced to him that his hour had come. He received the news calmly, like a man who had given up all hope, and was expecting it; more than that, like a man who was prepared to meet the worst, with the courage of designed resignation. M. EDMY DE LILLE, the Protestant pastor of the goal, was shown into the cell of the doomed man, and remained with him until the cellular van, that was to convey him to the scene of his execution drew up with a rumble and a clatter of horses' hoofs at the prison gate. HARTE entered it boldly, and the rabble drove off through the quiet streets with their early freshness upon them, escorted by twelve mounted gendarmes, armed cap à pie, and making music to the ride of death with their clanking accoutrements. The Ecole Militaire, that huge pile of barracks that will be familiar to those who visited the Exposition of 1867, from its position facing the Champs de Mars, was fixed on as the place of execution. The Polygon of Vincennes is the spot usually designed, but the Ecole Militaire was nearer, and this is no time for the formalities of precedent. Whatever is done to paralyze the invader has better boldness quickly. The courtyard of the barracks was occupied by all the troops quartered there in marching order. The battalion of the Grenadiers of the Guard, that serves as depot, was there in line with fixed bayonets, and detachments of Lancers with their gay pennons, and brave, brawny Cuirassiers, and the Guides—the daintiest of all the French cavalry—in their heavily-embroidered jackets, were there too. A pretty sight for a military man, these flashing arms and helmets and polished cuirasses in the cheerful morning sunshine. How did it strike CHARLES HARTE, for he had been a military man by his own admission, a Lieutenant in the Prussian infantry? When the prisoner stepped from the van and threw a rapid look over the array of troops, he gave a few nervous twitchings of his head. The clock over the centre of the building chimed the quarter to 4. Six precisely was the hour fixed for the shooting. The prisoner had yet fifteen minutes to live. He was led into an angle of the court-yard, where the troop horses are usually shod, and which forms a quiet corner to itself. Here he was placed close to the wall, and in front of a squad of twelve men of the Forty-second Regiment of the line, namely, two Sergeants, four Corporals, and half-a-dozen privates. The firing party stood in two ranks, the front one kneeling, and the rear one standing. As the prisoner was approached by the turnkeys of the military prison, whose duty it was to tie his hands behind his back, he shrank back and said, "No! I want to die like a soldier." But on representations being made to him that these ropes were often dispensed with, he yielded. His eyes were then bandaged, when he expressed a wish to be allowed to give the word "fire." Adjt. CONGUY, who had acted as registrar to the court-martial, came forward and read the sentence amid an impressive silence. At a pause at one of the paragraphs in the document the prisoner, fancying the reading had been finished, cried "Fire, coquins, et ne me manquez pas!" "Fire, you rascals, and mind you don't miss!" But the squad did not stir; it was waiting another signal. As the last syllable died away on the Adjutant's lips the officer commanding the firing party drew his sword, the soldiers raised their Chassepots to the shoulder and took aim, the sword was lowered, and a dozen shots went off like one, with a sudden startling detonation. Before the report of the discharge had smitten the straining ears of those who looked on, the prisoner fell forward with an inclination to his right side. Over his left breast, in the region of the heart, his shirt was torn into a jagged hole, where the bullets had entered. As he lay motionless on the ground one of the Sergeants in the rear of the firing party advanced through the little cloud of smoke and discharged his pistol into the prone figure. Dead man, I say, for HARTE must have died before he reached the ground in his fall. The troops were marched past the body, which was then lifted, limp and warm, and put, dressed as it was, into a coffin, and trotted off to the Cemetery of Mont Parnasse, where it was dropped into a grave which had been opened to receive it, and hastily hidden from view.

The Metropolitan Underworld.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News writes, under date of Aug. 22, as follows: "You know the stage traps in pantomime time, up which the guards of "The Deprayed Demon of Dumbledowndarry" comes up, armed cap-à-pie, thirsting for the abduction of maidens and the blood of the innocent. You have seen, too, mysterious men clad as divers or colliers, in huge stiff boots and blue jerseys, emerge from the London pavements, white-faced and mephitic, and have said to yourself placidly, "scene." Tombits these men are? Count ROULTGOSE did "Chinese" and "metaphysics," and you will arrive at something far more practical than he. What think you of the enemy entering a modern city by its subterranean ways; and as a given signal opening above ground? The chasse of the Prussians attempting this in Paris is actually being canvassed, and the few people who have been at the pains to ascertain for themselves, and by numerous personal experiences, what the sewers of a well-drained capital are like, what it is to walk in them and to follow their courses, will admit the possibility of a vast force finding its way below ground to any portion of a city. For example, every street in the City of London has its hidden counterpart below. The sewer map of the engineer to the corporation, Mr. HAYWARD, is as complete in its general outline as a map of the city itself; and beneath the larger thoroughfares men can walk erect, and in many of them three or four abreast. The subterranean works of Paris are more wonderful still, and are admitted to surpass those of ancient Rome. From the suburb of Auteuil to the Place de la Concorde an enormous subway runs, which is sixteen feet and a half high, eighteen feet broad, and more than three miles long. Besides this are below the city three spacious galleries running on each side of the Seine, the whole being provided with air-traps at regular intervals, and lighted with oil-lamps. Entered into either of these, a man who you find should be as well built as those beneath the City of London, and with facilities for cleansing them which are extremely suggestive of their value for strategical purposes. The subterranean drains, on galleries, are furnished with tiers tramways, along which small cars are pushed by three men, and furnished with a drop-plank, which fits exactly into the drain, and pushes the mud before it as it advances. On the turpid waters of the great collector, between Asnières and the Place de la Concorde, a good-sized boat is navigated, and the wildest stories are abroad respecting its possible uses to the enemy. Most of these may be dismissed as idle; but I am in a position to affirm that a careful inspection of these subterranean works has been made, and that Paris is preparing itself, not only, even on the waters under the earth, for the possible contention of its foe. If gunpowder will blow up iron traps, water will spoil gunpowder, and the sanitary rite known as flushing the sewers would effectually dispose of an intruding force. The catacombs, again, into which seventy different staircases lead, and which, extend not merely under the Faubourgs St. Germain, St. Jacques and St. Marcel, but under such important buildings as the Palace of the Luxembourg and the Pantheon, have had more attention paid them within the last two days than has been bestowed for years. Their uses under contingencies, which it is inexpedient to name, their size and value as repositories, are all canvassed eagerly, and nothing shows more plainly the anticipations of the people of Paris than the keen interest they display in such topics as these.

STRASBOURG.

An Account of the Early Operations of the German Forces.

The Staatsanzeiger thus describes the operations of the German force before Strasbourg: "Since the 12th of August Strasbourg has been invested by a small body of Prussian, Bavarian and Baden troops. This corps is a portion of the Southern Army, and is, therefore, under the command of the Crown Prince; but it forms an independently acting division, and has been under the direction of the Baden Gen. VON BEYER, who, having returned to Carlsruhe on account of illness, his place is temporarily filled by Gen.-Lieut. VON WERDER. The Grand Duke himself takes an active part in the management of his troops, and has stationed himself at Lampertheim, where the head-quarters are placed. The garrison of the fortress appears to be from one to 20 men strong, to whom a few battalions of the National Guards may be added. The artillery equipment is very good, but the besiegers are provided with everything necessary for a regular siege. The troops intrusted with the investment of the place are closely quartered in a wide semi-circle in the surrounding villages. These villages in the neighborhood of Strasbourg are free from billeting, have dollar for furnish fixed quantities of provisions. The railways radiating from the fortress to Brumath, Gravenstaden, Molsing and Colmar, are in our possession; the line to Kehl is temporarily broken up, and the roads to Selz, Haguenau, Lobsann, Bischweiler and Bitche are held by us. All other ways of intercourse in time out of the stronghold of Schlestadt, seven miles (German) distant. The first encounter between the garrison and the besiegers occurred on the 12th, when the Baden troops at three separate points successfully attacked the Grand Defensive, with which, for the purpose, the equipment of the walls, the raising of the glacis, the barricading of the approaches with palisades, trenches, chevaux-de-frise, and other obstructions—the garrison is actively employed. In one of these encounters the Baden Artillery succeeded in setting fire to a railway goods train, while a field battery placed within 3,000 paces of the fortress commanded the railway buildings, which the fire had lighted up. The loss of the Baden troops on the 12th was three killed and seventeen wounded. On the 14th the commandant of the fortress, Col. DU CHASSAN, made a sortie in the direction of Oswald, but was repulsed with a loss of men and three guns. On the 15th the investment was closed on all sides, and the firing of the 17th fring was begun on the right bank of the Rhine near Kehl, lasting nearly the whole day, with but short intermissions, and it was vigorously returned. The encounters which have as yet occurred show that the besiegers aim especially at the northern and southern sides of this triangular fortress. Col. DU CHASSAN appears to intend, according to the latest reports, to withdraw into the citadel. At least the blowing up of the cannon foundry and the artillery depot, on the 10th, seems indicative of this. He would in that case abandon the town, so as to be better able to stand a siege in the citadel, which is provisioned for three months. The Imperial Alsatian states that the besiegers, having had several of their batteries silenced by the fire of the garrison, now content themselves with throwing twenty or thirty shells into the place at night. Few persons have been killed by these projectiles, and the inhabitants are obliged to take refuge in the cellars. Fifteen houses have been destroyed by the bombardment. The cathedral has been injured. The town is said to swarm with Prussian spies, and an order has been issued that any person found on the roofs of the houses shall be immediately shot. It seems that the Prussians have informed by warnings from the town of the recent sortie, and were therefore on the alert even before the assailants had passed the gates of the fortress. The commandant had threatened reprisals against Kehl in the event of a bombardment, and the Baden troops, considering this, that town has been almost destroyed."

ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

M. Louis Blanc on English Opinion.

Writing to Le Temps, under date of Aug. 29, M. LOUIS BLANC remarks: "In the critical circumstances to which we are placed it is necessary above all things that we should have courage to look on boldly into our position. To shut our eyes with indifference would be a crime. To be wanting in courage would be an opprobrium, but to nourish illusions would be almost an act of idiocy. In order to place ourselves in a position to meet danger, the first condition is to comprehend its extent. It would, indeed, be a strange transformation of the French nation if it had lost its heroic habit of adapting its energies to the peril. Those who might be disposed to veil the danger in order to give heart to the nation, calumniate and outrage it. When we come to examine the picture of our position as it is presented by the more or less official journals which are published in Paris in contrast with that presented by the English press, a feeling is aroused that France should be ignorant of how seriously she is menaced, and how important it is for her safety that she should again become her old self. The English do not know—and yet history exists to teach them—of what the great arm of France is capable, when they regard her condition as desperate. In the first place, nothing in the official French character obtains the slightest credence. Every telegram signed by the King of Prussia is accepted in England as an article of faith. Every telegram announcing that our army has gained a success is literally regarded as naught. When the conflicting doubts of the numerous battles of the 16th, were received here, we read upon the placards of the newspapers: "Great victory of the Prussians. The French claim a victory." In other words, the Prussians had conquered because they said so. As to the French, the probability was that they were lying. For a Frenchman living in England is not this heart-breaking? There is no one here that does not suppose that for NAPOLEON it is a question of life or death to conceal reverses which are the consequences of his imprudence, his incapacity and his blind and foolish precipitation. There is no one who does not say: 'Every defeat sustained by those soldiers of France, whose almost superhuman intrepidity seemed to do violence to a formidable science of destruction directed against the Empire. It is necessary, therefore, that the black side of things should be concealed at any cost. The safety of the Empire depends upon it, and the Emperor knows it.' There lies in part the secret of the incredulity so unfortunately fatal to intelligible against which are powerless the most formal assertions of the authorized depositaries of power in France. They would be believed if it could be imagined that they had no other anxiety than to save the country. They are not believed, because the anxiety to save the country is thought to be complicated with a desire to preserve the dynasty."

SAVAGE MURDER.

A Man Beaten to Death with a Spade—Another Badly Injured—Unprovoked Assault by Drunken Boatmen—Their Arrest.

About 1½ P. M., yesterday, JOHN MCCARTHY, known by the soubriquet of "Stitch," from the number of scars and seams in his face, and JOHN QUINN, two boatmen, generally engaged on the East River, entered the lager-beer saloon of DANIEL RIGBY, No. 807 First-avenue, and called for two glasses of beer, which they got, and for which they refused to pay. They demanded more drink, but did not get any. They then became very disorderly, and caused a great deal of disturbance, until Mr. RIGBY, assisted by a couple of men who were in the saloon, took the roughs by the shoulders and ejected them. QUINN commenced swearing that "he would do" Mr. RIGBY, in a horrible manner, and seized a heavy spade which was lying on the street and made an effort to strike him. Mr. RIGBY retreated in and shut the door, le

THE DEFENSE OF PARIS.

Expulsion of the Germans from the City—A Severe but Necessary Measure—Provisionment of the City—Moving Scenes—The Value of the Fortifications, &c., &c.

From Our Military Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Aug. 29, 1870.

The proclamation of Gen. TROCHU against the Prussians now residing in Paris, which has of course been sent to you by cable, is causing the greatest distress among many honorable families, the German workmen here, as in the United States, closely affiliating with the people, having many sympathies in common, and being noted for their skill and good conduct. The ties of friendship and of long residence have firmly united them to the French, and they have connections with the families of Paris, not only by common occupations, but by intermarriages. In time they would probably have become good citizens of France, but they hesitated too long between their moral duty and their dread of the law of conscription. They are now suffering from the consequences of not choosing manfully between the country of their adoption and the country of their birth. I happen to be intimate with a great many families of this nationality who, for some time past have been expressing fears of the probability of this measure, and I know that this order plunges them into great distress. The lives of hundreds of families of Paris will be broken, and the poignancy of the grief caused by forced separation, resulting from the proclamation of Gen. TROCHU, will be increased by the charges of treachery and treason to which each will be respectively exposed. Even if perfectly innocent of any hostile thoughts, they will be suspected by many of those whom they have known and loved, and the knowledge of this fact will give rise to the bitterest thought during this forced exile from the French capital. To give up the little home which they have been years in preparing and adorning, is bad enough, but to give up the ties of kindred and of connexion, as many must do, is heart-rending. There are, connected with the depots of various sorts of the forest of Bondy, more than ten thousand German laborers and skilled workmen. All of these men must leave. While this may seem a very harsh measure, there are many things to justify it. Several restaurateurs have openly gloried in the Prussian successes, and have announced their intention of treating the German troops when they arrive in Paris, while others, forgetting that France has nourished and enriched them, show a marked hostility at this trying hour. In time of war the good have to suffer for the sins or follies of the bad.

THE WAR OFFICE.

It is positively announced this morning that the War Office has not only decided to move, but has really commenced its packing. The bureaus are to be moved to some one of the interior cities. Tours is spoken of, and it may be stated with certainty that one of the chief cities of the region of the Loire will be selected. But the Comte DE PALIKAO will not immediately quit the capital. The wisdom of the movement is evident. New armies are springing up on all sides, and time is all that the French now demand. To organize the new forces requires all of the force and the energy of the War Department, and if it were shut up in Paris, during a long siege, the work of organization would stop. Whether or not the Prussians advance upon this city, there will still be large armies without, and new ones will be organized while Paris is holding out against the enemy. It is not probable that, were it perfectly free to do so, either BAZAINE or MCMAHON would come back to this city. Their business is to operate without, and to do all the harm they can to weaken and retard the enemy, until the new levies of France are ready for active service. To cut the War Office off from these Generals, and from the country, would be to cripple the nation seriously.

FLIGHT OF THE TIMID.

But while the Government officials are packing up to leave, thousands of people are packing their goods for the city. At all hours in the day one now sees wagons laden with furniture coming in from the country, and followed by the poor peasants who have been thus rudely driven from their homes. People living in the environs of Paris are also seeking safety within its walls, bringing with them all articles which might be carried away by the enemy, or the cherished penates which might be easily destroyed. This exodus from the environs is not confined to the side nearest the enemy, for in all the little villages, from Lonjumeau to St. Denis, the inhabitants have come to regard the Prussian invaders with horror and alarm. Thousands are yet alive who remember the occupation of 1815, and an old woman of Lonjumeau told me, the other day, about the soldiers which were picketed upon her. "The red-coats," said she, meaning the English, "were all well enough; and they paid for what they got; but the Hessians were robbers and thieves." Stories of that occupation have been repeated to the children from that time, and in the environs of Paris the very name of Hessian, or Prussian, carries a feeling of hatred or disgust, very like the feeling which once prevailed in the United states. It is very hard to eradicate the animosities engendered by war. With such feelings slumbering in the heart it requires but little to arouse them, and today we find the hatred for the Germans all the more intense, because there are those alive who can give vivid pictures of German excesses during the last occupation. Hence the people are flying to the city. Many will not be permitted to stay here—few, perhaps, who have no relatives to vouch for their means of subsistence; but they are permitted to bring in their little treasures and to store them for protection. At this moment it is impossible to get transportation enough. A friend of mine living at St. Denis wished to bring his family pictured to the city, and he had to transport them in a handcart, making five trips to carry one ordinary load. Everything in the shape of transportation is taken up by the Government for the purpose of bringing in provisions.

THE PROVISIONMENT OF THE CITY.

This leads me to speak again of the provisionment of the city—a work which has gone on with the greatest rapidity under the direction of M. DUVERGIER, the young Minister for Commerce. Even if the Prussians do not besiege the city, he will no less deserve well of his countrymen, for, he has shown a spirit and an energy worthy of all praise. No sooner was a siege expected than he began to form plans; no sooner was a measure adopted them he sent his agents into the country to "take stock," if not to take immediate measures for the siege. The orders found him prepared, and he has since been deep in the work of provisioning Paris. Day before yesterday, two of his agents, running over Tournan and Meaux, were rapidly filling the order for 150,000 more sheep and fifty thousand beeves. There are now in the city, or in the Bois de Boulogne, some forty thousand beeves lately brought in, which, with those which were previously here, give us a year's supply in ordinary times. Counting the increased number of mouths when the army is here, and the increased consumption during a time like this, we have a very large supply for three months, and a moderate supply for five or six months. At first, salt provisions were thought of, but it was found impossible to get a sufficient supply in Europe, and, besides, the effect upon the public health was feared. Now there is a certainty about the matter of fresh meat. Yesterday forty thousand head of sheep were brought in, and have been placed for the time in the unfinished buildings of the new college of Rollin, Boulevard Rochechouart. Several speculations have been given as to the amount of wheat, rice and grain now on hand, and, striking a mean between them we get a commissariat supply for four months. Going a little under the lowest of these calculations we get enough for two months, quite long enough for all practical purposes.

THE FORTIFICATIONS.

As a general thing the population of Paris knows very little about the value of the fortifications which surround them, and, although they have heard the works spoken of, have seen them in their Sunday walks or drives, have no particular ideas about their strength or their powers of resistance. It is well that people know the full strength of their protectors, for such knowledge gives confidence and induces calm. The great wars of the present century have shown how difficult a thing it is to take a regularly fortified town, and experience teaches us that it is no trifling task to take a place like Paris, with a bastioned enceinte and towers of masonry, and surrounded by another line of forts upon the most perfect plan. The resistance of a few towns, far less powerful than Paris, will demonstrate this idea, and show us something of the resistance of which Paris is capable. In September, 1813, MARMONT was forced to retire from before Bourne-Vedras, with the loss of a quarter of his men. In June, 1811, the English besieged Badajos, an attack was made upon San-Christoval, and the forlorn hope of six hundred left three hundred men in the breach. The loss in other bodies was very great, and they were forced to retire. The defense of Kosen, or the battle of Auerstadt, in October, 1806, is historical. September, 1813, DAVOUST was shut up in Hamburg, and in November cut off from all communication with France. The population was hostile. The Marshal had only about 40,000, but he fortified the town so well, in a short time, that he held the town all the Winter of 1813-14 against all attacks. The siege of Sebastopol will be remembered. It was only after eleven months, and by the construction of parallel approaches that the Malakoff and Redan could be taken. The Allied armies had no enemy in their rear, no danger to their communications; for if the Russians had had a navy, or could have operated in open country, the town had never fallen. The memoirs of NAPOLEON tell us that he often had the idea of fortifying the heights of Paris, but desisted from fear of disturbing the people, and the great events which came so soon after prevented him from carrying out his plans. He believed that the capital is the centre of the intelligence, the grandeur, the glory of a nation, and that its defence was a matter of necessity. This is something of a feudal idea, perhaps a warrior's idea; but up to this moment we have to acknowledge that there is a vast amount of truth in it. Paris must have owed her safety to her walls more than once; and if, when the Allied armies were here she had only been prepared for a siege, her enemies would have melted away before they were able to strike a blow. And the ancient walls were nothing to the works of today. We have a great many facts in favor of NAPOLEON'S idea. If, in 1805, Vienna had been fortified, the battle of Ulm would not have decided the war. If, in 1806, Berlin had been fortified, the army beaten at Jena might have rallied and held ground until joined by the Russians. If, in 1808, Madrid had been fortified, the French had never dared leave Valladolid and Salamanca behind them, even after the victories of Espenosa and Burgos, to march upon that capital. Citations from history are not wanting to prove the value of fortifications, nor do we lack examples to show the probable power of resistance contained in them. It was NAPOLEON'S idea, also, that fifty thousand Gardes Nationaux and three thousand cannoneers could defend the capital against three hundred thousand; and if that is near the truth, what must be the size of the army required to carry the finest fortifications ever erected, and manned by one hundred and fifty thousand troops? It is never very satisfactory to attempt the solution of a problem with two unknown quantities, but there is something in this question, for us within these works, which gives plausibility to the proximate reckonings upon such data, however absurd it may be in a logical point of view.

THE ARMY.

The French Army is now being increased by a fine body of men belonging to the gendarmerie of the country, and regiments of able-bodied, good-sized fellows are coming and going with the days. These men have been in the army; many of them have been non-commissioned officers, and they wear the medals of good conduct or of campaigns. From the departments occupied by the enemy many of these men have been released, and they are now forming into corps. And a new law has passed here which led to a great cheer. No measure has given rise to so great an amount of satisfaction among the populations of Batignolles, La Villette or Faubourg du Temple than that which now brings the sergents de ville into active service. The cab drivers, who are the natural-born enemies of the Police, cannot resist a crook of the elbow and loud puffings, which might seem meaningless, did not this attack of exhilaration break out at the very moment a sergent de ville is passed. The general feeling is a pleasant one, if not exactly in a Christian temper, and the people are anxious to see if these men, noted for their excessive zeal and brutality against an unarmed crowd, can do as well against an armed enemy. There are about four thousand of these men in Paris who will be put into active service at once.

YOUNG AND ARDENT VOLUNTEERS.

New companies of Franc-Tireurs are noticed daily, and we have several regiments now forming in the city. Any one walking through the courts of the Louvre in the morning, or behind the Pavillon Richelieu, will see companies of these young and ardent volunteers being drilled in skirmish firing by some bronzed and bearded Zouave. In fact, it is hard to tell where there is an open space not used for the purposes of drill. All of these companies of volunteers are provided with the stamp of the Minister for War, it having been a question as to what their status would be if captured by the enemy. It is said that the Prussians shoot all peasants who fire upon soldiers in defense of their homes, and they have hanged a girl who chopped off a Uhlan's fingers. Further, threats were made against the young men who went into these bodies of sharpshooters, and it is to protect them that the seal of the War Office input upon them. Otherwise they might be regarded as bandits.

FOREIGN LEGIONS.

Several foreign legions are also in process of formation, notably one at Tours. In this city the Poles, Danes and Swedes are raising a battalion. There are many other special projects on hand. M. GAMBETTA is said to have demanded permission to defend Fort Bicetre, and received it; but the last part of the story looks rather doubtful. It is further said that he has ten thousand men enlisted, all constituents of the Left. The whole of this story is doubtful. Some of the papers laugh at the idea, and they say that there is small likelihood of danger in granting such permission. They are a little hard upon the son of JULES SIMON also, who has been trying to get a substitute, and who only failed because there was a difference of 8,000 francs between him and the substitute. M. SIMON thought 20,000 francs too high a price to pay. GUSTAVE AIMARD, the author and journalist, is also forming a corps of éclaireurs, to be called the "Press Corps." To enter, it is necessary to belong to the Paris Press and to furnish your own equipments. Many names are already down on the list. The contingent of 1870 was estimated at 1,140,000 men, but under the present application of the law, allowing no substitutes or exemptions, except in few instances, the total will rise to 160,000. One by one such items rise to show that France is rich enough in men if she can only have time to organize and arm them.

PARIS NOTES.

The American Ambulance—The Grand Procession Headed by Americans—Letter—How the News Came to France—Napoleon—The War Correspondents—The Villetti Affair.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, August 29, 1870.

The ambulance of the Anglo-American branch of the International Sanitary Commission made a most brilliant exodus from Paris yesterday (Sunday) afternoon. Immediately after the declaration of war by the Emperor NAPOLEON III., a number of American ladies devoted themselves with unremitting zeal and energy to the work of relieving the wounded of the battle-fields. At first the advances of these ladies were coolly received by the General French Society holding its meetings under the Dome of the PALAIS DE L'INDUSTRIE and M. A. in Marshal Canrobert at the Palais de l'Industrie. There were of many difficulties to encounter that the idea of a separate organization was very near being abandoned. The perseverance of our country women, however, was finally crowned with success, and the ambulance which took its departure yesterday for the battle fields of the Marne and Meuse was headed triumphantly on its march down the Palais de l'Industrie, along the Champs Elysées, the Rue Royale and the Boulevards, to the Northern Railway Station, by a trio of the most prominent promoters of this benevolent enterprise, each one bearing a national banner—the French flag in the centre, the Stars and Stripes on the right, and the English flag on the left. Although this ambulance was really the best in its appointments—over all that have preceded it—having finer horses, a larger number of surgeons and nurses—in fact, being almost luxurious in all its details, its appearance was not greeted with the enthusiasm it merited. When the cortege emerged from the portal of the Palais de l'Industrie a feeble effort at cheering was attempted by a few Americans, who were in the crowd assembled in the Champs Elysées, but no response arose from the multitude whose brothers were to be relieved by the disinterested exertions of a friendly nation. Although undoubtly unappreciated by the Parisians, it is impossible to say too much in admiration of the courageous and self-sacrificing spirit of our American ladies. Not satisfied with the part they had already taken in the noble work for the relief of suffering humanity, they did not hesitate to assume the responsibility of it by walking fearlessly in front of the procession along the most public thoroughfares of the capital. The Sunday crowd of the Boulevards followed silently but in constantly increasing numbers, and without in the least comprehending a demonstration of the sort, every one asking his neighbor what the combination of the three flags borne by ladies could possibly indicate. The emblem of the International Convention, however, insured respect from every one, even when seen by the side of the British national flag; it is to possible that the appearance of the English element was not satisfactory, the London Times having succeeded so thoroughly in stirring up animosity in France as it did in the United States during our war. The French, in fact, do not regard with favor any attempt at mere display at this time, their own ambulances being characterized by the severest simplicity.

HOW NEWS IS RECEIVED.

The Bureau of War News at the Ministry of the Interior, which has up to this time so admirably fulfilled its intentions of conveying enigmatic intelligence to the journalists of Paris, has at last found a formidable rival—one entirely left out of view by M. JULES SIMON and other members of the Republican Party in their adjurations to the present Government to change its present system of secrecy for that of divulging all to the people—one that the Government itself with all its foresight has not provided against—never dreaming that the private correspondence of NAPOLEON III. and EUGENIE, Regent of France, being cut off, a substitute for the indiscretions of the Tuileries would inevitably arise in the boudoirs of the ladies of the great Captains who are gone to the wars, and who, at much risk, must send consoling news of their return, after the manner of the great "Marlbrook." So, I hear this morning that the junction of the armies of MCMAHON and BAZAINE was announced only last night, with tears of patriotic joy, by the Marquise DE BEAUMONT, relative of the Duc DE MAGENTA, (MCMAHON,) to Mme. BOURBAKI, wife of one of the Generals of the Imperial Guard. The wife of Marshal BAZAINE (a young Mexican lady dowered by MAXIMILIAN) is living at Versailles, and has not at all partaken of the panic with which the rural population in the vicinity of Paris has been stricken for the past few days. The Marshal telegraphs to his wife that there is not the slightest danger in her remaining at her present residence.

PRINCE JEROME.

Prince NAPOLEON, (JEROME,) of all the members of the House of BONAPARTE, is the one who inspires the least amount of sympathy among the French nation. During the Crimean and Italian wars he so notoriously sought to be at a safe distance during all the important engagements that he obtained a most unenviable reputation as a soldier. This reputation he seems resolved to continue to deserve. At this moment, when every Frenchman who has a spark of patriotism or of nationality is seeking to render some service to the country, Prince NAPOLEON is reported as intriguing to negotiate with Italy to make terms with England and Austria to bring about a peace on condition of preserving the dynasty. Prince NAPOLEON would serve the cause of the dynasty far better by leading an army corps to a victory over the Prussians.

INFLUENCE OF THE REPUBLIC.

The Republic, so long the bête noire which has haunted the troubled sleep of the BONAPARTE family, is showing its irrepressible presence in the dominions of BISMARCK and the King of Prussia. Accounts of republican demonstration in Munich are constantly reported, and it is now asserted that the Prussian Police have discovered a vast plot, having its ramifications throughout the whole extent of the Confederation of the South, in Wirtemberg, Bvaria, and in the Grand Duchy of Baden.

THE PRUSSIAN POLICE SYSTEM.

The Prussian Government is served by the best organized police system in Europe, as has been fairly demonstrated by the well-trained "spies" who have spread themselves throughout all France for years past. The benefits of this admirable system have just been extended to Alsace, which is under the direction of the famous M. STIEBER, and his Adjutant, who, in addition to his renown as a detective, adds that of a dramatic writer of merit.!

THE CORRESPONDENTS ON THE PRUSSIAN SIDE.

M. BERTHOLD AUERBACH, the romance writer of the "Black Forest," is one of the war correspondents with the Prussian Army. He writes to the Gazette d' Augsburg with the signature A. B. The Prussian correspondents are more fortunate than those on the French side. Mr. VIZETELLY, one of the correspondents of the NEW-YORK TIMES, has not yet been heard from, and great fears are felt for his safety. M. GUSTAVE ISENBERT, of Le Temps, (Paris,) has also disappeared. His journal appeals to the public to aid in finding any trace of him.

THE VILETTI AFFAIR.

The Court-martial engaged in trying the prisoners in the Villette affair held a sitting this morning. Among the men tried were BARDEAU and ENDES, the latter a writer in the Libre Penseur. They both acknowledged that they had desired to overthrow the Government, and would have done everything in their power to excite the people to proclaim a republic. They protested earnestly against any connivance with the Prussians, averring that their great aim was to obtain a better form of government, in order to be able to drive the enemy from the country more efficiently.

Two other men, LAGRENEAU and MORDACQ, are being heard at this moment. The former was arrested with a large assortment of pistols and poniards in his possession. The latter was wounded in the riot at Villette, and boasted he had killed a policeman. At the time the affair occurred the darkened reputation BLANQUI was in Paris, and lodged with EMILE ERCKMANN.

The Court will probably remain in session until late to-night.

The Crowe Divorce Case—Application for Alimony.

The Crowe divorce case, the facts in which have already appeared in the TIMES, was up yesterday before Judge Yoxall, in the Superior Court, Special Term, on a motion on behalf of the wife, who is plaintiff, for an allowance of alimony and counsel fee. The only new facts developed, in addition to those already published, was the statement by plaintiff's counsel that the affidavit of the hack-driver had never been sworn to by him. The reply of the plaintiff also denied that the house to which he and her friend had removed on Thirty-second-street was an infamous house, and, on the contrary, affirmed that it was a respectable boarding-house. Judge JOYCE took the papers and reserved his decision.

Advices on the Isthmus—Engagement between Crews of the War-Steamers of Chili—Shipwreck—Robberies on Panama—Shipping and Miscellaneous News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ASPINWALL, Colon, Isthmus of Panama, U. S. C., Sunday, Sept. 4, 1870.

Since I wrote last we have had no news from Bogota or the interior of Colombia, and the local news upon the Isthmus is at best of no importance. On the arrival of the Arizona the NEW-YORK TIMES was eagerly sought for by all parties, it being considered the reliable medium of communication, and I was obliged to dispense my file, right and left, among both Prussians and Frenchmen. There was a grand demonstration made here by the Prussian Consul, Mr. MAHL, and in Panama the excitement was intense. Nothing like it has been known since "the great rebellion." The Henry Chauncey arrived on the morning of the 31st, bringing us one day's later news, which confirmed the verbal reports per Arizona. The cable connecting Jamaica with the United States and Europe was to have been completed on the 24th ult., and we shall probably receive our next news via the Royal Mail steamer to the 4th inst.

Gen. KILPATRICK and family are stopping at the Bethancourt House, and will sail per Arizona, so that you will soon have this eloquent lecturer with you. "The South American Republics" are to be his theme. The General has resigned his important mission as United States Minister to Chili on account of ill health.

Panama is still quiet. H. SCHUTER'S steamer Montijo has arrived from Chiriqui, bringing many members of the State Legislature, which convened at the Cabildo on the 1st inst., in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

Hon. PABLO AROSEMENA was elected President; F. J. IGAZA, Vice-President; JOSE ARRAGO, Second Vice-President, and BUENAVENTURA AGUILIZA, Secretary of State. The latter presented the message of the President.

On the evening of the 3d inst. Mr. FERRY, the United States Consul here, was robbed of quite a large sum in gold. The Consulate was entered from the second-story balcony while Mr. FERRY had gone to supper. There is a clue to the thief, and the Consul may yet recover his gold. A Mr. JOHNSON, from Chili, while stopping at the Grand Hotel, in Panama, was robbed of $400, gold, and suspicions rest upon the same person suspected in the other case. I withhold the name of the suspected party for the present, but future developments may bring it out.

The United States steamer Mohican is still at Panama awaiting orders all well on board. There is no United States man-of-war in this port, but I am informed that the American Consul has urgently written to have one sent here, and it is to be hoped that his request will be complied with at an early day. The bark New-York, Capt. GIBBS, with coal from Baltimore, arrived on the 28th ult., and is discharging. There are a number of American-built vessels in port, all under the English flag. When will Congress repeal the law which forbids their returning? They are all anxious to again fly the Stars and Stripes.

Among the passengers from the Isthmus per Arizona are, JAMES BOYD, Esq., proprietor of the Panama Star & Herald, and Mr. S. W. D. JACKSON, agent of the Boston Ice Company.

The weather is very fine and the health of the Isthmus good.

The steam-ship Constitution is two days late, owing to the immense China freight she brought down. The passengers will be dispatched immediately per Arizona, and the Henry Chauncey, which was sent down as an extra steamer, will take the China freight, and probably leave here Tuesday, the 6th. The Arizona also takes a full cargo.

Central American Country—The Frontier Question in Guatemala—Matters in Honduras—Miscellaneous News from Salvador, Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamship Guatimozin, Capt. RIVAS, arrived at Panama from Central America. The American brig Kelly Stevens, Capt. J. WILSON, and the American schooner Milton Badger, Capt. DODGE, were at Punta Arenas. The former loading with coal for Callao, and the latter with coal for San Francisco. The following news has been published by the Panama Star & Herald:

GUATEMALA.

From this Republic we have dates to the 14th inst. If we are to judge by the periodicals from this part of Central America, there's an entire dearth of news, which means peace, and there fore is to be taken as a good sign. The Gazeta of the 6th August, has some observations on the subject of the frontiers of Chiapas. "Some days ago," it says, "there was a talk in this capital about what was transpiring in the populations of Chiapas and Soconusco, both on the frontiers of our territory, that a new invasion was being planned similar in object to that headed by CARLOS CRUZ, but apparently with different leaders. Some days ago, Mr. Consul-General GUTIERREZ, to other Chiapas, in his work, and forbade to excite the people to revolt, but did not try to bring forward the old plan in the interior. Yesterday we received a letter in which we read the news that has been brought, that people were being recruited on Comitan for the purpose of invading the Republic. It has been said that D. MIGUEL GARCIA GRANADOS, who, as is well known, was sent out of the Republic in February last, under a promise and bond of not endeavoring directly nor indirectly to disturb the public peace, after having been in the capital of Mexico, came to Comitan with a dozen of adventurers as officers, and established himself in Comitan, having made a sort of alliance with the sanguinary BARRIOS, and other criminals that accompany him, and that they were publicly occupied in forming a force composed of the worst characters to invade the populations of Guatemala. All this seems so incredible that we can scarcely believe it, the attempt being no less absurd than criminal. With what titles could this new revolutionary chief present himself? CRUZ had some notoriety, and had been in the service of his country. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has addressed the Governor of Chiapas, denouncing such acts, which could not take place without the connivance of the Mexican authorities. The mere permission of such acts infringes international right, seeing that Guatemala and Mexico are at peace. "The Semana, of the 4th, says of this subject that the Revista Universal of Mexico has a" paragraph headed "serious rumors," which said as follows: "It is said, in reference to communications from Chiapas, that the Guatemala General, PEDRO GOMEZ, at the head of 800 men and four pieces of artillery from Guatemala, had entered into Soconusco, and was forming an intrenched camp to serve as a base for future operations. It is also said, continues the Semana, that in another number of the Revista Universal, the Diario Oficial denied that there was any truth in the rumor, and that the origin was most probably false information, purposely sent to certain periodicals to get up a bad feeling between Mexico and Guatemala."

HONDURAS.

The principal item we find in the decree of the Gaceta of Honduras, of the 8th inst., is a communication from the Bishop of Honduras to the Supreme Government in relation to the collection of diezmos from the people. A decree is seen had been issued by the Government suppressing this tax and putting in its place a contribution. As the people seemed inclined to resist the demands of the Church and follow the dispositions of the Government, the Bishop states that without the sanction of his Holiness the Pope, the Church could not be deprived of its right to tithes and the collection of them.

SALVADOR.

The Gaceta Oficial, of the 13th of August, gives an official account of the report made by Dr. RAFAEL ZALDIVAR to his Government on his return, after having successfully negotiated a treaty of commerce, friendship and navigation between his own country and the Government of the Sister of Prussia. Among other things, it goes into details with respect to Consuls, they are only granted immunities, when they are Consuls (ni exequatur) and citizens of the nation that appoints them, who possess no property in the country, and pay no trade-tax or any sort of industry. The President, in answer, recognizes the high services of Dr. Don RAFAEL ZALDIVAR, and returns him thanks in the name of the supreme Government.

COSTA RICA.

From the Diario de los Pueblos, of the National Convention of Costa Rica, dated the 6th inst., we take the following: "Accounts arrived by that Assembly on the 3d of the 6th." ART. 1. Declares that Ex-President Don JESUS JIMENEZ and his Minister Don A. JIMENEZ and Don EUSEBIO FIGUEROA, have gone beyond the limits allowed for the exercise of their functions and have infringed various laws." Nevertheless, other articles of the decree permit both the Ex-President and his fellow Ministers to return to the country without being necessarily subject to a trial, always being understood that they accept what the Assembly in reference to them determine, otherwise they shall be tried, subject to be tried in the form and before the tribunals which the new constitution shall determine. Don MANUEL ALVARADO was to set out on a diplomatic mission to Peru, Chili and afterward to Bogota, to settle the long-pending question of limits between Colombia and Costa Rica. There is a good deal of popular excitement about the president, and the Ex-President Don JESUS, whom the actual President supposed to wish to screen. The halls of Congress were generally crowded with an excited populace, who, among other things, wished to know about money paid, expended by the Minister Julio Volio, which, after some hard sparring on both sides of Congress, it was decided that the question should be put to the Government.

NICARAGUA.

The candidature of St. Quadra, according to the Gazeta of Nicaragua of the 6th ult., seems to be acceptable throughout the country. About two months only are wanting till the elections. Yet everything is quiet, and no signs of agitation. Indigo has been extensively planted at Rivas. In the hills of Managua the coffee is promising well. Cotton has been cultivated extensively near Chinandega, and it plants escape the locust, the harvest promises to be at least 10,000 quintals of cotton, and quite equal in texture, which are cultivated on a large scale. The favorable reception of the name of Don VICENTE QUADRA has also had a good effect on the industry of the République. The Gazeta of the 12th says Don RAMON UREAERA, commissioned by the Governments of Honduras to arrange the question of limits with Nicaragua, has arrived at Leon in the beginning of last week. The engineers of both States having already surveyed all the points, it is expected there will be no difficulty in coming to an amicable settlement.

South America—Effect of the War News in Peru—Chilian Intelligence.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Friday, Sept. 2, 1870.

By the arrival of the Peninsular Steam Navigation Company's steamer Chile, Capt. WILLIAMS, on the 29th ult., late dates have been received from South America, but the news seems to be of little importance.

The following items have appeared in the Panama Star & Herald:

PERU.

According to our Lima correspondent, considerable anxiety prevailed in that city respecting the effect that the hostilities between France and Prussia might have on the Peruvian bonds and securities in the London market. The news, however, that in London the bonds remained firm, and in Paris an insignificant fall had taken place, restored the general equanimity. The Government especially regarded the matter with particular interest, since by the recent sale of the bonds negotiated in Paris and London to Mr. Meiggs at seventy-nine per cent., the national pledge was given to cover any loss he might experience from the decline below that figure. Mr. Meiggs is confident that no material change will take place, and that all parties will have reason to be satisfied with the sale. Large quantities of material and rolling stock were arriving in Callao and Mollendo for the use of the Oroya, Puno and Arequipa Railways, and the latter was rapidly advancing toward completion, the first train being announced for the through trip in October next. As soon as this is effected, the Puno line will be pushed vigorously forward. Some brisk attacks had been made in Congress on the policy of the Executive in regard to financial matters, and the Dreyfus contract was made the butt for the arrows of the Opposition. A resolution was introduced to annul this contract, but with a clause that would deter any Peruvian citizen or house individual from accepting the conditions of the proposed substitute, it being ordered that before the first benefits of the transaction, the advances made by DREYFUS to the Government must be returned to the French house. This bill, it is unnecessary to state, was tabled by a large majority. The Government has so far carried its measures, and one of the dangers apprehended has been successfully tided over. This was the case of the refractory Bishop of Puno, who denied the authority of the Government, while he recognized that of Rome. Accused of treason and held to trial, the religious party in Congress sought to obtain the consent of both Houses to his immediate and unconditional liberation, which was overwhelmingly defeated. According to the leading papers, received by the steam-ship Chile, the Republic is in the enjoyment of peace and progress. Advices of the 17th from Puno, on the large expense taken up with the proclamation of Gen. MELGAREJO, called forth by a sort of rebellion in the Northern Provinces of Bolivia, for the purpose of interrupting the reunion of Assemble Constitutional.

CHILI.

We have received dates up to Aug. 10. Congress, besides being taken up with various bills and propositions, was engaged with other subjects—particularly the law of naturalization, the Presidential term, and the Aurucanian war. The latter seems to have been given up, at least for the time being; $2,000,000 had been spent since 1861. It was now resolved to preserve the frontiers intact, and prevent any further raids. The farewell address of the late United States Minister to Chili, Mr. BALMACEDA, was published. In it, he refers to the share he had in trying to prevent the pronouncement of Peruvian ships. The English and French Ministers, on the Pacific, had left for their respective posts. The Spanish Minister, Don [illegible], was ready to leave, but he was not ready, and the Spanish ships were leaving the harbor.

Prize Match—Regatta vs. the Olympics.

The Atlantic Club, of Brooklyn, played its return with the Olympic Club, of Washington, on the Capitoline Ground, at Brooklyn, yesterday. At the end of the first three innings it was supposed the latter Club would carry off the laurels, as they led the score more than three to one, but the old-time batting for which the Atlantics are famous rallied them in the next two innings to please 17 runs to their score on the score-book, and though the Olympics tied them on the last four innings, they could not regain their lost ground. Charles Hall the place of ZETTLER, who is quite well indeed. FERGUSON, though sadly with a bloody finger, played but few balls to bat, and GEO. HALL made pretty catches of GLEN, of the other side, came from a sick bed to play the game, and, though playing in the opposite position of left field, which was not the one he should have attempted, made some fine catches. BARRINGER and BURROWS received the thanks of the spectators for their individual exhibitions of good play.

We conclude with the score:

Shooting Affair in Jersey City—A Prominent Gambler Shot and Dangerously Wounded.

JAMES O'NEIL was arrested by United States Deputy Marshal CROWLEY, yesterday, on a charge of perjury, alleged to have been committed by him on Thursday last, in becoming bondsman for MORRIS S. HILL, the defaulting teller of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, at Yonkers, Westchester County. He became HILL'S surety, for the sum of $7,500, assuming at the same time that he was the owner of two houses at Nos. 44 and 46 Twenty-place, and that he resided at No. 346 Sixth-street. He also claimed that he was employed as a commission broker by a liquor merchant, at No. 69 Pearl-street. All these statements are represented to be false. It is said that No. 346 Eighth-street, if it existed at all, would be about the middle of Tompkins-square. O'NEIL was apprehended in a liquor-saloon, on a protracted search, by Mr. CROWLEY. It is said that there was $600 paid for the bond, out of which he only received $50. He was anxious to have the same kept from his wife for fear of a divorce. "Jimmy" O'BRIEN, as he familiarly called the sheriff, He waived an examination before Commissioner [illegible], and was committed to the Jersey City Jail.

Custom-House Affairs.

The report that the Collector had made great promises to applicants for position in the Custom-house that there were places in the gift of the Collector, is pronounced "an Irish anthem." He is untrue. No pledges have been made but such as the Collector can perform, and these are very few. With respect to the returns from Castle Garden, it is stated that Collector [illegible] has not yet determined what course to pursue, and will not act hastily, nor at all until he has had an opportunity to give the Department a personal examination, which he has not had yet.

DISASTROUS FIRE.

A Large Portion of Tompkinsville, S. I., Destroyed.

Tenement Houses and Stores and the Railroad Stables Burned to the Ground—Two Horses Burned—Immense Excitement—Disgraceful Conduct of the Firemen.

The most serious fire that has ever occurred on Staten Island was that which broke out yesterday morning in Tompkinsville and ruined more than one-half of Arletta-street, and a large amount of valuable property, causing an alarm that was at upward of $100,000. Many of the buildings destroyed were quite new. Bylinsky is believed to have been the work of an incendiary, and matters as they have been detailed sustain very forcibly this view.

The exact locality of the fire was that portion of Arletta-street leading from Quarantine-landing, and lying between Bay and Minthorn streets. The Staten Island Railroad stables are situated in the former street, and at night contain all the live stock of the Company. About 1½ yesterday morning, Mr. PENCK, the Superintendent, on entering the stables, saw that some oil which had been left there was on fire and had already communicated with a portion of the wood-work. He made an effort, with some of his men, to put it out, but failed, and got badly burned about the hands, arms and neck. Seeing that the flames were spreading rapidly, the alarm was given by ringing the fowry bells. The railroad stables and two others were soon one mass of fire, against which the wood-work of the adjacent buildings stood but little chance of escape.

The fire continued to make its way among the stables in rear of the street, but soon it attached with increased fury the back of the centre house of the block, which eventually succumbed. The fire communicated to the buildings on both sides; thus the flames traveled both ways, and all the houses being of wood, they were destroyed in a very short time.

In the meantime as many Police as were available—ten, under command of Capt. HOLBROOK—arrived at the scene and did their share of duty in saving life and property; and it is here happily to be added that although the fire was so disastrous to property, and although there could not have been less than 300 persons inhabiting the quarter destroyed, not a single life was lost, nor was any person badly injured. This may be accounted for by the action of Capt. HOLBROOK and his men, aided by several citizens. It is further said that the people in the houses had timely notification from the fire in the stables. They were, therefore, enabled to get out, and some of them to save portions of their property.

During the progress of the fire there was the most intense excitement in the streets—so alone in Tompkinsville, but in the neighboring villages which were each illuminated as if they themselves were victims to the flames. In Stapleton the light was so clear that the smallest article could be distinguished on the sidewalks. At 2 o'clock the fire was at its height, and from every building in the block issued sheets of flame with terrible fury, until at about 4 o'clock the fire began to die out for want of fuel. Every house in the block from Minthorn to Ray-street had disappeared. The only vestiges left behind to tell of their having once existed were the heaps of burned timber that lay on the ground, and seven brick chimneys that stood, each alone among the ruins, about forty feet high. These presented a most unique appearance. There they stood, standing as sharp pillars of brick, of five minutes height, and scarcely more than three feet square from the base up. They shook with the wind, and were evidently so dangerous that, at 4 o'clock, four of them were thrown down by the Police. Three were left standing.

There were engines on the ground, the first of which arrived about forty-five minutes after the alarm was given, and the others were on hand some time after. If we except one of the bucket companies, the engines and men might as well have been a thousand miles away. They made not the slightest effort to assist in putting out the fire; they complained that the river was too shallow to allow their proper hose nor other materials where the Department stood in need of, and thus they stood and grumbled while one of the handsomest portions of their island was being laid waste by the flames. They were asked to form line to the water, as in this manner one engine might supply water to another, and so on to the burning houses; this would have prevented any great strain on the hose, but they refused to do it, and allowed the fire to have its way. The Fire Department is by no means properly attended to by the authorities, and it is time there is no delay in service, as was fully proved at this fire. Mr. DE RIXE telegraphed to New-York for the fire-boat, and in a short time after the Fuller arrived, just in time to witness the last efforts of the flames. The hose, however, was attached, but soon burst, and there after there were of little avail.

The Tompkinsville Fire Police, an organization of most respectable citizens, were present, and under the command of Capt. HOFFMAN did excellent service, rendering the county Police great assistance.

THE LOSSES AND INSURANCES.

The loss, especially for a place of the size of Tompkinsville, is very considerable. As nearly as can be ascertained they are as follows:

JOHN DUNFY, Bigelow-street; loss on house $4,000; partially insured in Knickerbocker Company; loss on stock considerable; not known.

—WEBER; loss $4,000; fully insured in Germania and Harmonia Companies.

Mrs. MORAN; loss $4,000; insured in Home Insurance Company.

E. BARNES; loss $2,000; insured in Home Company for $1,000.

LOUIS YOUNG; loss $5,000; insured in Kings County Insurance Company for $1,500; loss on furniture $600; fully insured.

Mrs. JONES, (three houses); loss $14,000; insured for $6,000.

HENRY HOBMER; loss $2,800; insured fully in the Manhattan Company.

Mrs. HALLEDAY; loss $1,500; insured for $700.

Staten Island Railroad Company; loss $10,000; fully insured.

CHARLES FINCH; loss not known; said to be fully insured.

Mr. MCCUE; loss $500; no insurance.

JOHN FERRY; $2,200 on house; no insurance.

HENRY BARNES; loss on furniture $700; insured for $400.

HARRY NEWHORT; loss on furniture $5,000; fully insured in the Home Company.

J. V. CARROLL; loss $10,000; insured for $5,000.

JOHN CARR; loss $1,000; no insurance.

The above is as correct a list as at the time could be obtained. There are, however, some omissions. Many of the poor people living in the small shanties lost from $100 to $200 by the destruction of their household furniture. Others who had saved their little goods had them cut on the road up to a late hour last night, having no place to take them to. This dreadful fire will have an injurious effect on Tompkinsville for some time, as the ground belongs to St. Andrew's Church, and was all leased out. Many of the tenants were merchants, so that it is not likely the leases will rebuild under the circumstances. The railroad company had two very fine horses burned to death, and several of their cars were badly injured.

Crimes and Casualties.

CHARLES C., alias PETER W. SMITH, of No. 254 Thirtieth-street, was arraigned at the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday, before Judge COX, on a charge of swindling. It appears that on one 16th inst., the prisoner ordered $86 worth of liquors from EDWARD MCCABE, No. 503 Tenth-avenue, the payment to be made when the property was delivered. The liquor was brought to his residence, and he retained it, refusing to pay until the evening. When a messenger was subsequently dispatched for the money, the prisoner was discovered to be locked and a warrant was issued for the possession of SMITH. It is also alleged that on the 8th the prisoner ordered $700 worth of wines from EDWIN & MCKELLEN, No. 72 Front-street, and presented a check for that amount on the Bull's Head Bank in payment. On making application to have it cashed, they ascertained it was a forgery and returned it to SMITH. The latter at once tore it up, and, as the property had not been delivered, Messrs. IRVIN & KELSEY did not think fit to prosecute. The Judge committed the prisoner for trial at the Court of General Sessions.

At the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Justice COX, EMMA STEDMAN was charged by the proprietor of the Belvedere House with swindling him out of $20. The defendant, disguised a little of excess of the prosecutor a few weeks since, ran a bill to the amount stated, and, in violation of the hotel laws, left without payment. She was held in default of $500 bail.

SUSAN HAYS, (colored,) was held to answer at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge LEWINTHE, on a charge of feloniously assaulting SARAH H. BROWN, by striking her with a razor in the arm.

JAMES LYNCH was detected in the endeavor to enter the premises No. 477 Second-avenue on Sunday night, through the skylight, by Officer JONES, of the Eighteenth Precinct. Two others who were connected with him in the attempted burglary escaped. LYNCH was brought up at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday, and held to answer.

JOHN MILLER, of No. 668 Third-avenue, and THOS. MCKENNA, Twenty-fifth-street and Third-avenue, had an altercation yesterday in reference to the merits of Messrs. BRADLEY and BRADMAN for the Chelsea'ty, when McKENNA drew a jack-knife, with which he stabbed his opponent in the shoulder, inflicting a slight but painful wound. McKENNA was brought up at the Essex Market Police Court, in the afternoon, and held for trial in default of $500 bail.

BERNARD MCGUINNESS was held to answer, at the Tombs Police Court, yesterday, before Justice DOWLING, for stealing $48 from the person of LIVINGSTON WALSH, of No. 21 East Broadway.

POLITICS AND THE CENSUS.

A Manifesto from Mayor Hall—The Federal Census Declared to be Purposely Ineffective—A Census by the Police Commissioners Recommended.

The following communication from Mayor HALL was received by the Board of Assistant Aldermen at the session yesterday, and was referred to a special committee:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Sept. 12, 1870.

Gentlemen of the Common Council:

I herewith transmit to you a triplicate original of a proclamation which was issued from this office on the 10th inst., in pursuance of an act of the Legislature. By the terms of the same act it becomes your duty, on or before the 1st of October proximo, to select in each election district a place for registration and polling. It will prove agreeable to all our constituents if such district be selected, for the best convenience of the electors, both in respect to topographical situation and area of accommodation. In this connection I deem it my duty to direct your official action to the subject of a recent decision of the Federal census. Numerous complaints have been preferred at this office by respectable citizens, and authenticated communications have been sent to the public Press, alleging that such census was partial and ineffective. It was certainly presented at a season of the year when a large percentage of our inhabitants were absent from the City; and when habitations were left in charge of servants who were perhaps disarmed, or probably unable, to give proper and full information. Our tenement-house population is at all times sensitive to the visit of a Federal officer, because it remembers the inquisitorial powers of the tax-gatherer. To some of the localities I have reason to believe the census agent would ask preliminary questions substantially like this: "How many soldiers could this house turn out?" There was, therefore, a suggestion of concealment made to the tenement-house occupants, and in addition to the innately ineffective and unsearchable manner of taking the census, there was the mentally embarrassing difficulties in acquiring needful information about it. In other districts papers to be filled out and called for were never again asked about. As a special instance of the original omission to prepare a perfect system, certain correspondence has been officially published that the Superintendent at Washington had omitted from his blanks inquiry respecting a certain item, and the omission not having been discovered until the census began, information regarding the item was supplied (at the special request of the Census Bureau) by the Bureau of Police. If this Police can be relied upon for one item by the Federal officials, may not the Police be further instructed with the furnishing of reliable returns about the item of our City population? My recommendation is that under corporate authority immediate arrangement be made for taking a census through the Police Department of a few districts, and in various parts of the City, so as to furnish more reliable tests; should the comparison between corporate and Federal census show great discrepancies in such districts, that then the work be continued throughout the entire City. It is of the greatest importance that the resources of this growing City should not be belittled for partisan effect. The Federal census just taken is claimed to make apparent that our population has not increased within the past ten years. In the meantime the City has extended throughout many miles of peripheral streets. The statistics in the Department of Building verify that about twelve thousand additional houses have been erected during these years, and that a large proportion of such buildings were tenement and lodging-houses. Indeed, every observer knows that of late years a decided tendency of our City population has caused a preponderance of families toward hoarding and lodging-houses, in preference to the vicissitudes of hotel or tenement-house life, and thereby concentrated inhabitancy. Upon every side has been manifested large development of Metropolitan business and hospitality and business accommodation of inhabitants who yearly crowd within City precincts from all States of the Union and foreign countries. The emigration statistics of our port evidence that within those ten years about 1,000,000 of immigrants from without the City have landed at Castle Garden Depot. And these statistics exclude all who have arrived here from foreign ports as passengers, but who are not technically classed as emigrants. The corporate authorities of this great City owe to their constituents the duty of protesting against and rectifying that sacrifice of our Metropolitan position to partisan hostility. To accomplish which this recent census was manifestly ineffective, that remains, indeed, our political rights are to be sacrificed. We have a right, as a commercial city, to an acknowledged representative character in Congress and State Legislature. When it is remembered that Congressional representation is to be apportioned upon the basis of population, there is another political motive for diminishing the population of a democratic City. It would not be appropriate to discuss here whether or no Federal statistics were needed to give color to the unjustifiable statement, many times made in some reckless Administration journals, that the rose in New-York City was disproportionate to its population. But it is appropriate (because based upon official action of the past) to recall that the only time at which the contrary of this latter allegation was contended for by the same journals was when Federal officials declined to perform the duty of making the census as prompt as possible, for the various drafts from 1862 to 1864, and which were enforced by the Provost-Marshals of the then Administration with manifest unfairness toward the great masses of the people. Also to recall that after the necessity for drafting had ceased, and an opportunity was offered five years ago by a State Republican census of depriving New-York City of due representation in Senate and Assembly, there was a "change of base," and the City population was statistically diminished before the new legislative apportionment was made. In now submitting this recommendation for a census test under corporate authority, the Mayor feels that he but moderately reflects the sense of injustice which pervades the public mind against this new discredit of the growth of New-York City.

A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor.

The Mayor has caused a proclamation to be issued from the rotunda of the City Hall and other public places, stating that as the Common Council have neglected to redistrict the City, he has, according to the power vested in him by law, accomplished that work himself. The location of the new districts is appended to the proclamation.

Steam on Canal-Boats.

In the TIMES, some days ago, attention was called to a new method of applying steam-power to the propulsion of canal-boats, patented by a Mr. GOODWIN, the inventor of the "walking dolls." A private exhibition of the model referred to took place yesterday afternoon, at No. 91 Liberty-street. As a full description of the plan of the machine has been already published in these columns, a repetition is unnecessary. Suffice it to say, that, in the opinion of those present, the ingenious contrivance exhibited yesterday seemed well qualified to answer a want long felt, but hitherto unsatisfied—namely, that of supplying a motive power to be used on canals, in place of the horse-power, which now labors along, at a rate painful alike to man and beast. But the invention should be confined to its original purpose of application to canals, as they now exist, in order to render its adoption profitable or probable.

Sharp Sentences by Judge Bedford—A Speedy Trial of the Anti-Gamblers' Case to be Had.

At the opening of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, before Judge BEDFORD, a married man named ADAM H. LOSE was arraigned on a charge of having committed an indecent assault on CHARLOTTE HARSNAP, aged eleven years, living with her parents, at the corner of Fourth-avenue and Sixty-eighth-street. The testimony was very extensive, but was unfit for publication. Witnesses were produced for the purpose of proving good character for the accused. He was convicted of an attempt at indecent assault, and was sent to State Prison for five years.

The case of WEST, GALWAY and PRESCOTT, the three members of the "Society for the Prevention of Gambling," who were recently convicted for swindling, was marked for trial on Thursday next. The verdictum of their peculiarly atrocious have been published heretofore. At the solicitation of counsel, Ward was given permission to visit his sick wife in company with a court officer. His wife was represented to be dying with consumption.

KITTY HARRISON and CHARLES SMITH were jointly tried on an indictment for grand larceny, in which they were charged with having stolen $120 from GEORGE W. NORVELL, a farmer, at a disreputable house in Canal-street. The victim was drugged previous to the theft. Both prisoners were convicted, Harrison was sent to the State Prison for five years. The female was shown to have been used as a dupe by her companion, and was discharged on promise of future good conduct. The Court subsequently adjourned until this morning.

SUIT AGAINST GEN. SHARPE.

Alleged Irregularities in the United States Marshal's Office—Complaint of a Keeper—His Fees Fraudulently Withheld From Him.

United States Marshal SHARPE was cross-examined yesterday in the United States Commissioners' Office before a referee in the suit brought against him by JOHN DOHERTY for the recovery of $247 as keeper's fees, alleged by the latter to have been illegally withheld from him. The complainant is the base-ball supplied sub-lodgeh of an India-rubber manufactory, owned by HOSMER, BROWNING, Bankrupts, at Tankhaho, and secured eighty-three days and nights, for which he was only paid $136 at the Marshal's office. It is claimed that the Register in Bankruptcy allows $3.50 for each day and night the prisoner was employed, but that the lion's share of the money was kept at the Marshal's office. One of Marshal SHARPE's assistants made an affidavit before the Registered which he made oath that DOHERTY had acted as keeper for eighty-six days and nights. It is known to be a constant practice for the Marshal's officers to allow the poor keepers less pay than they are really entitled to and are directed with in bankrupt cases. The money thus fraudulently detained from them is sometimes placed in a so-called "Deputies' fund," and is subsequently divided among the Deputy Marshals, none of it being given to the keepers. Marshal SHARPE testified, yesterday, that he could not separate the amounts paid to each keeper out of the two items of $136 which has been taxed by the Register as keeper's fees in the Hodgman case, but that he would be able to furnish the bill of particulars on Wednesday.

Deputy Marshal ROBINSON and another witness were examined for the purpose of proving that $3 50 per day of twelve hours was the pay for keepers, but that it was the custom to only allow them $2 a day. Gen. TREMAINE, Chief Deputy Marshal, announced that Chief O'BRIEN was the only person authorized to look with the books at the Marshal's office, and that he was absent from the City at that time. The case was then adjourned until Wednesday next at 1 P. M. It is claimed that Marshal SHARPE's books will show that $172 and $190 were paid into the Deputies' fund in two different cases. The latter amount was not reported until after DOHERTY had commenced his suit.

MONDAY, Sept. 12—P. M.

The week opens with much dullness in all the Wall-street markets. The Gold Room moves sluggishly at 112¾@¾ ₱ cent. and the foreign Exchanges are quiet at 110¾ ₱ cent. short sight, and 109¾ ₱ cent. for 60 days London. The trade demand for Bills is comparatively moderate, although there is a heavy business going on in the way of selling foreign Goods, which will have to be covered by large remittances later in the season. The Public Funds are inclined to firm prices today on a light offering of 5-20s and other Bonds. There is not much doing in foreign orders in 5-20s either way. If anything the course of business is from New-York to London. The Cable telegrams today, while reporting full prices for Consols and 5-20s, refer to a state of suspense on the Stock Exchange, awaiting definite news from the armies, and reported peace movements on the Continent.

The offerings of Money at 5@6 ₱ cent continue quite free, on demand loans, to the Brokers, especially from private lenders. As a rule, the Banks are not rich, and generally charge 6 ₱ cent. on call, and 7 ₱ cent. on discounted paper. The return of averages for the last week is not yet fully explained, as to the unexpected small gain in specie, where a considerable loss was looked for; but, on the other hand, it is believed that the Greenback average was a rising one, and that more Notes were held at the close of the week than are shown on the average. As remarked in our weekly review this morning, there is a demand for money to carry over some of the new Railway undertakings until peace is restored in Europe, and also on the hypothecation of Southern State Bonds, and liberal rates are paid by the borrowers where the security is approved by the lender. The difficulty encountered in occasional instances is that the undertakings referred to are not well known to this market, and have, as yet, no standing at the Stock Exchange. In regard to Southern State Bonds, we remark, that the changes, either actual or apprehended, in the political status of the States, are thought of by buyers of and Money-lenders upon these Bonds, in connection with their future credit and recognition. These changes have not been auspicious in Tennessee or North Carolina. How the case may be in South Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana, the present Fall elections may determine. In South Carolina, the present Republican administration are quite confident of re-election.

The official Board lists of sales reflect the extreme dullness in the Railway speculation at the Stock Exchange. The prices for New-York Central, Reading and the Western Stocks, up to 3 o'clock, were quite up to the sales of Saturday. After the late Board, the following quotations were made as compared to Saturday Afternoon:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The prospects of peace are brighter. From Paris and Brussels the report is received that Russia, seconded by Italy and Austria, demand an armistice, and that the Prussian Armies advancing on Paris have been ordered to halt to await results. M. THIERS has gone on a secret mission to London, Vienna and St. Petersburg. A Brussels telegram says that the dispatches from the United States expressing the hope that there might be a cessation of hostilities, the dethronement of NAPOLEON having been accomplished, created quite a sensation at Berlin, and copies were at once sent to the King by a special courier. Our Washington special explains that these dispatches are merely those sent in answer to the appeal of the new French Government for intervention to Ministers WASHBURNE, BANCROFT and MOTLEY, the tenor of which has already been given.

The Ministry publicly announced to the Parisians, yesterday, that the garrison at Toul had been furiously attacked, but had repulsed the enemy, dismounted many of their batteries, and placed ten thousand Prussians hors de combat. The attack was begun early in the morning of Saturday, and fighting was continued until after 9 in the evening. Verdun continues to hold out; and so also does Montmédy, The garrison of the latter splendidly repulsed the Prussians on Thursday. Meaux, twenty-five miles from Paris, has been surrounded; and Prussian forces have appeared in several villages, suburbs of Paris, to the east and north-east, one of which, Noisy-le-Grand, is only nine miles from the city. The special reports of these successes led to more activity on the Bourse yesterday, and there was more buying on speculative account than there has been for many days. It is reported that BAZAINE also has made a successful sortie from Metz.

King WILLIAM telegraphs to the Queen concerning the Laon affair. He says that the citadel exploded after the surrender, just as the Prussians were entering, and 200 men were killed, including 200 of the Mobile Guard; and he remarks, "there must have been treason." The Prussian official report of the capitulation of Sedan places the number of prisoners taken at 120,000, instead of 100,000, as previously reported. A large portion of the wounded have been removed, and all the dead in the fields about the city have been buried. It is now asserted that MCMAHON wished to retreat from Sedan to Paris, but was prevented by the orders of PALIKAO, and that he will explain his course to the public as soon as he recovers from his wounds.

It is said that the Prussian authorities surrounded the Emperor's journey to Wilhelmshohe "with exquisite delicacy of care and provision for the dignity and feelings of the prisoner;" and advices from Cassel are that he is treated there like an honored guest of Prussia than as a prisoner. The Empress was concealed in the environs of Brussels three days, while on her way to England.

Another demonstration of enthusiastic Parisians has been made before the American Legation; and yesterday Mr. WASHBURNE, being recognized on the street, was cheered by crowds which surrounded him. Demonstrations of sympathy for the new Republic continue in the northern provinces of Spain.

Friendless France.

Why is it that the French people show so much enthusiasm at this moment in connection with America and Americans? The other day they surrounded the United States Legation and cheered for hours together. Yesterday, as the telegraph informs us this morning, Mr. WASHBURNE was recognized in the street, and instantly the crowd began to cheer. In a few minutes the crowd increased—it does not take long to bring a large assemblage together in Paris in these excited times—and the American Minister received a "most enthusiastic ovation." The explanation of this outburst of feeling is not difficult to find. When a man is plunged in very great distress, his heart overflows toward those who utter the first words of sympathy in his ears. It is the same with nations. France has gone through a bitter experience. The whole world has been against her—in quarters where she looked for kind words she heard only denunciations. Never was a nation so solitary in the midst of great disasters. At last the Government and people of the United States sent over a message of gentler meaning. The proud spirit of a defeated, but not humiliated, people at once is softened, and they send back to us their gratitude for what it has cost us very little to give them.

When it became a question of King against Republic, the sympathies of this country were pretty sure to be transferred to the side of France. Now that NAPOLEON has disappeared from the roll of monarchs, there is no more thorough representative of arbitrary Government left in Europe than the King of Prussia. He has opposed every liberal reform, and only the success of his crafty Minister's policy in strengthening the position of Prussia in Europe, has induced the independent States to cast in their lot with the King's. It is not Prussia which has won in this campaign, but United Germany; and our best hope must be to see Prussia subordinate in the future to the general Confederation. That cannot happen while an upholder of the principle of the Divine right of Kings remains paramount. Intrigues have evidently been set on foot to make King WILLIAM "Emperor" of Germany. We should prefer to see, as one result of the war, a republic established in both Germany and France. France has already freed herself from imperial rule, and now we are told that King WILLIAM stands against at this part of his work. He treats NAPOLEON as a reigning Sovereign. He looks upon the Provisional Government with scorn. Can it be supposed that the American people will extend to him their sympathies when he occupies a position so much at variance with their own political instincts? Germany fighting for the integrity of its soil against an Imperial army is one thing; Germany fighting at the bidding of a despot against a Republic is another. We are on the side of people struggling to be free, and, therefore, we are now once more enabled to resume our old cordial relations with France.

Our policy has been eminently straightforward, and hereafter will bear examination. But what verdict will history pronounce on the conduct of England throughout this struggle? Between the pernicious influences of the Court, the usual blind infatuation of the London Times whenever a foreign question arises, and the imbecility of the Gladstone Government, England has been led into a course which will reflect eternal dishonor upon her. She has fawned upon Prussia, and only been spurned by BISMARCK in return. She has heaped all kinds of insults upon the Power with which it was to her best interests to be at peace, and covered with obloquy a ruler who, on several occasions, encountered the unpopularity of the French people in his efforts to strengthen the English alliance. "If," said Mr. BRIGHT in the House of Commons, on July 21, 1859, "there be one thing which is more distinctly marked in the policy of the Emperor of the French, since his accession to the throne of France, than another, it is his perpetual anxiety, by every means consistent with his own safety, and with the interest, as he believes, of France, to ally himself with England, and with the Foreign policy of England." What return has England made? She has seized the first convenient opportunity she found to heap indignities on the French people and their late ruler at the same time. Can anything be more disgraceful than the language which the London Times has systematically used toward France since the war began? It has rendered itself the organ of Count BISMARCK, only to be treated with contempt. It has made itself the slavish mouth-piece of a Court which has always thought more of its German connections than the honor of England. What is the ancient repute of England compared with the Queen's cousins, daughters, and sons-in-law? What does England owe to the House of Hanover but revolted colonies, miserable wars, gradual degradation from a first to a third class Power, and a whole world embittered against her? If England can never have a Queen like ELIZABETH again, or a King like WILLIAM III., the flag of a Republic cannot float too soon over her royal palaces.

"The English people," wrote M. EDMOND ABOUT lately, "stimulate their cold hearts with all the generous blood our soldiers have shed upon the battle-field, and cast a thought neither toward Belgium, nor Holland, nor the Dutch colonies, nor to that rivalry of the seas which would avenge our defeat upon themselves if the fate of arms condemned us without appeal." If England's proper place in this struggle was not by the side of France—and we are not prepared to go so far as to contend that it was—at least it was her duty to have refrained from outrageously insulting a brave and noble people overtaken by sudden and vast calamities. Has France made any compact with England that she has not faithfully observed? It is easy enough to turn upon her with jibes in this hour of her misery. But the Times, which is foremost in doing the dirty work—was it not the first to prostrate itself in the dust before NAPOLEON after the coup d'état? Has it not contrived to render England detested all over Europe, and to create a feeling of animosity toward her in the United States which fifty years of British diplomacy cannot obliterate? The last mistake has been the worst of all—and bitterly England will have cause to rue it. If Lord PALMERSTON had been living, the Court and all its influence would have failed to drag England into its present degradation. But Lord PALMERSTON was the last of the English Ministers who had the courage to study the welfare of his country, rather than the decrees of a monarch whose views of foreign affairs are dictated by hereditary prejudices and German connections.

Breathing Time.

There is a partial lull in the operations of the war. The besieged cities continue their defense, with varying degrees of fortune. The provinces continue their contributions to the strength of the capital. But the march of the Germans is for the day stayed. Almost within hailing distance, they are suddenly brought to a stand, and rumor is busy with the cause. Russia and Austria, it is said, urge an armistice, and there is talk of the impression produced at Berlin by the utterances of the United States in behalf of peace. Meanwhile, M. THIERS has left Paris on a secret mission to London, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, and there are signs of a more hopeful spirit among the leaders of the Republic than has been observable for some days.

It is evident that statesmen are to be heard in this contest as well as soldiers. Continental Europe begins to realize its interest in the questions to be settled; and BISMARCK is not blind to probabilities which the imperious old King might not pause to consider. He is able now to say whether slaughter shall go on or cease; but when the adjustment of the terms of peace shall be reached, other Powers will be entitled to judge of the equities involved. The disgraceful selfishness which leads England to discard its obligations as a nation is happily not contagious. Russia and Austria are not disposed to be passive spectators while the national existence of France is in jeopardy, and the Prussian Minister prudently demands breathing time to consider the possible consequences of his master's policy. There are, moreover, mutterings from home which it would not be wise to ignore. The republican element which is diffused throughout Germany appreciates the inconsistency that would make war against an Emperor, and then continue war to restore that Emperor to the Tuileries;—and for domestic discontent the strategy of VON MOLTKE does not provide. Still further, the friendly warning that emanated from Washington reveals the inherent weakness of a crusade against the French Republic, and with all its strength, Prussia is not strong enough to defy the moral sense of mankind. There is a power which armies cannot annihilate, and this power it is which protests against the undoubted purpose to force upon the people of France a Government at variance with their will.

The halt may be brief, but it will be useful. It will help to determine where rests the responsibility of prolonging the conflict, if it is to be prolonged, and what are the inclinations of the two Powers immediately concerned. The moderation which marked the origin of the Republic will be best followed by reasonableness when the conditions of peace are to be considered. And the final vindication of Germany is dependent upon the restriction of the purposes of the war within the original limits, and the enforcement of conditions which are obviously essential to the maintenance of future peace. The sagacity of BISMARCK is at this moment a better basis of reliance than the magnanimity of the King.

Gen. Woodford and the Germans.

The Leader, the weekly organ of Tammany Hall, betrays the nervous anxiety of the Democracy with regard to the German vote in the coming election, by printing in its last issue the following paragraph fourteen times, in large capitals, on its editorial page:

"LET THE VOTERS OF THIS CITY NEVER FORGET, during the just-opened campaign, that STEWART L. WOODFORD, now the Republican candidate for Governor against JOHN T. HOFFMAN, by his casting vote when Lieutenant-Governor, many times prevented the amendment of penalties against Germans for quietly opening gardens on Sunday and drinking lager-beer without disorder."

Our German fellow-citizens must feel highly complimented at the respect which Democratic newspapers and Democratic politicians pay alike to their intelligence and to their principles. The above paragraph, which is a fair sample of the political arguments addressed to them by the Democracy, presupposes two things. First, that Germans have not sense or knowledge enough to distinguish between truth and fiction; and second, that the chief end and aim, or as the World puts it, "the dearest and most sacred right" of a German is to drink lager-beer in a garden on Sunday. Lieut.-Gov. WOODFORD never did anything of the kind attributed to him, for the simple reason that neither he nor any other Lieutenant-Governor in this State ever had a casting vote in the passage of a law. On motions and resolutions relating to the order of proceedings in the Senate, the Lieutenant-Governor, in case of a tie among the members, is allowed to give the casting vote, but in no case is he allowed any voice in the passage of a bill.

What Gen. WOODFORD did do when Lieutenant-Governor, was this: A motion was made in the session of 1868 to take from a standing committee a certain bill repealing the penalties imposed many years previously on the sale of liquor on Sundays, and refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole. There was a tie vote on the motion, and Lieut.-Gov. WOODFORD gave the casting vote against it. The Republicans at that time had two majority in the Senate. Since then a new Senate has been elected, which has a Democratic majority of four, together with a Democratic Lieutenant-Governor for presiding officer, and a Democratic Governor to sign any bill that it chooses to pass. The new Senate has held one session, and what did it do? Were the penalties against the Sunday liquor traffic repealed? Not a bit of it. They stand now just as they stood then. A bill to repeal them was introduced last Winter, but it was found to have so little chance of passing the Senate that the party did not dare to press it to a vote. Had they done so, it would have been defeated by a large majority. It is easy for Democrats in the Legislature, when their party is in the minority, and has none of the responsibilities of legislation, to introduce all sorts of bills to catch this or that class of votes; but when they are in power, and have to acknowledge their own measures, they are not so ready to give them a place on the statute book. One thing the Republican Party has not done; it has not given pledges to the Germans, when out of power, to enact certain laws which it has refused to enact when in power. What it proposes to do now on the lager-beer question is plainly stated in the platform adopted at Saratoga. It proposes to take the liquor question out of the Legislature, and put it in the hands of the people of each county, where it belongs. This is the doctrine of popular sovereignty, which is, or ought to be, a Democratic doctrine. The Germans are perfectly satisfied with this disposition of the matter, and on this, as on other questions, heartily indorse the platform adopted at Saratoga. The Democracy see this, and in it they see their own defeat in the coming election. Hinc illæ lacrymæ.

The Republican "Split" in Missouri.

We see, with regret, a disposition in some quarters to assail with much bitterness the promoters of the second Republican ticket in Missouri, and to denounce the nominations as in the interest of the Democracy. The Tribune, in its anxiety to serve Gov. MCCLURG as an ultra protectionist, began the attack, and politicians and editors who are of its way of thinking in tariff matters are following its example. Mr. GRATZ BROWN is held up to opprobrium as an enemy in disguise, and the movement of which he is the chosen leader is represented as part of a deep-laid plot to break down the Republican Party.

From this version of the case it might be inferred that between the positions occupied by MCCLURG and BROWN, respectively, there is some wide and general difference, and that the ticket headed by BROWN is an indication of hostility to established Republican policy. The truth is, however, that except in regard to a single question, the two platforms are identical; and upon the exceptional question, which relates to disfranchisement and disabilities generally, the Brown position harmonizes with the national platform, while the McClurg position is in spirit and effect at variance with it. We have already shown that the resolution relating to the tariff and taxation which was adopted by the Convention that nominated MCCLURG is as liberal as any rational revenue reformer could desire. It is, in fact, identical with the resolution adopted by the supporters of BROWN, who is a revenue reformer of the most decided type. The same may be said in reference to other subjects. Both sections of the party are hearty in their indorsement of the Grant Administration in their support of reconstruction and its results, and in their determination to perpetuate Republican supremacy. In these respects there is nothing in either platform to which the most captious critic can object.

The sole point of divergence is the question of disfranchisement, which is local in its character, and is impregnated with all the acrimony of a local quarrel. The circumstances of the State render this the distinctive issue of the canvass. A multitude of its citizens are denied the political privileges of citizenship, not as a penalty of convicted crime, but as a consequence of the strife to which Missouri, in common with other border States, was exposed during the war. Of the expediency of divesting large numbers of political power, so long as the exercise of that power impaired, or seemed likely to impair, loyal authority, it is not necessary now to speak. The wisdom of continuing the disabilities is the question to be considered. Tennessee, for a time sternly proscriptive, discarded proscription when it elected BROWNLOW identifying himself with the change with a warmth that sufficiently indicated the current of Republican sympathy. It was confessed that any possible good to be expected from disabilities was more than counterbalanced by the irritation, the heartburnings, the sense of injustice and wrong, which disabilities entailed. All these evils are in full play in Missouri, some of whose most substantial citizens are denied participation in its affairs. These can be no sudden re-enfranchisement because of constitutional obstacles, but inevitable delay only makes more necessary the formation of some definite policy upon the subject. The McClurg Republicans leave it open: their views, and the views of their candidate, however, are known to be irreversible to the continuance of disfranchisement. On the other hand, the Brown Republicans favor the removal of all disabilities at the earliest possible period. They deprecate the existing condition of things as a fertile source of hate, and urge a liberal course as essential to the welfare of the State and as conducive to the prosperity of the party.

It is apparent, then, that, however much the division in the party is to be deplored, there is nothing in the circumstances connected with it which warrants imputations upon the good faith, or the fidelity to the Republican organization of GRATZ BROWN and the Republicans associated with him in the enfranchising movement. The services rendered by Mr. BROWN to the Republican cause in Missouri have been too conspicuous and efficient to be forgotten; and among those associated with him are several tried and influential leaders of the party. He stands side by side with Republicans so staunch and true as Gov. FLETCHER and Senator CARL SCHURZ; and the fact should put to shame the authors of the attempt to heap odium upon the promoters of the second ticket. Indeed, the proposal to remove disabilities in Missouri is simply the carrying out, locally, of the general proposition which the Convention that nominated GRANT adopted at the instance of CARL SCHURZ; and it is in strict harmony with the policy recommended by several of the Southern States, and espoused by prominent men in Congress. The "regularity" of the McClurg Convention prevents controversy as to its relation to the party, but we cannot ignore the fact that its distinctive point of difference with the Brown platform also separates it from the policy proclaimed at Chicago in 1868, and from the whole tendency of Republican opinion in other States.

The "split" in Missouri cannot be healed while this campaign goes on. The McClurg and the Brown sections of the party will fight the question of enfranchisement to the end. It should be possible, however, so to conduct the canvass that no lasting causes of severance shall be created. This question settled, the only obstacle to party unity will be removed, and they will incur grave responsibility who introduce needless pretexts for quarrel, and intensify angry differences by impugning the integrity of candidates on either ticket.

The French Republican Platform.

We have repeatedly referred to the disposition which has been shown, even by the Press of this country, to disparage the present Republican leaders of France. Even when avowed opposition has been avoided, there has been displayed a desire to "damn them with faint praise," which is equally remote from the generosity they are entitled to expect here, as from a due perception of the actual merits and capabilities of the men in question. The Empire, it cannot be too steadily borne in mind, was no school for statesmanship. A personal ruler must be CAESAR or nothing, and must, by the very necessity of having no rival near the throne, be served by second-rate men. A Government so conducted lowers the whole tone of political debate, and forces opponents to use invective instead of argument, from the sheer impossibility of controlling the affairs of the State through an administration whose accountability is only nominal. Partly, therefore, from the absence of any real power in the representatives of the nation, and partly from their incorruptible Republicanism, the great majority of the present rulers of France are almost untried in the practical problems of modern politics. The one prevented them from developing any constructive talent in opposition, just as the other withheld them from any opportunity of doing so officially. Those who have previously acquired experience in the parliamentary struggles under LOUIS PHILIPPE, and during the brief existence of the last Republic, find, equally with their younger compeers, a new sphere of administrative effort, and a new range of political difficulties.

We lately adverted to the economic principles of M. JULES SIMON, as an evidence of the ability which existed in the new Government. The latest Parisian files furnish a manifesto published by the provisional Minister of the Interior, M. GAMBETTA, which is equally suggestive with that of his colleague, and is equally valuable as an evidence of a statesman-like grasp of the existing political necessities of France. The document, which is in the form of a letter to the Progrès de Lyon, sets out with a declaration of continued adhesion to the "programme at once Republican and Conservative," which he adopted at the elections of 1869. M. GAMBETTA candidly recognizes the fact that democracy has its abuses as well as absolutism. While justly condemning Caesarism as "the most ruinous and bankrupt of political transactions," and announcing that the doctrine of the Divine right has been finally abolished, he characterizes Jacobinism as "a ridiculous and diseased parody." A political order based upon universal suffrage, which shall control foreign policy as well as internal affairs, and whose embodiment shall be found in republican institutions respecting equally the rights of the workman and the "sacred rights of property,"—such is the ideal which M. GAMBETTA, in opposition, proposed to realize, and which, in office, he is now engaged in working out. He is not unmindful either of difficulties or dangers. He shows that the fears of one class must be allayed, and the distrust of others abolished. All must be brought to entertain a love for democracy. The proletariat must confide in the class above them. He discerns in the war a great cohesive influence by the necessity it imposes of the same communion of sacrifice, of self-denial, and of heroism. For the moment, his motto is "everything for our native land and liberty," and afterward comes the task of proving that "the Republic is henceforth the sole condition of the internal safety of France, and of the equilibrium of Europe." In this task, the chiefs of the French Republic have the sympathies of every true friend of freedom, and the enunciation of a political creed at once so conciliatory, progressive, and peaceful, is another proof of how little the world has to fear from the latest triumph of European democracy.

To justify the Mayor's proposition to test experimentally the accuracy of the recent census by instituting a fresh census through the instrumentality of the Police, it is not necessary to attribute partisan motives to those whose negligence has called forth loud and very general complaints. The Mayor suggests that there is a partisan purpose to be served in understating the population of the City; but, on the other side, it may also be said that political considerations will impair the trustworthiness of any local report upon the subject. It should be enough that the arrangements recently made by the Federal officials have not commanded the confidence of our citizens. There has been gross negligence or gross incompetency somewhere. Every man we meet testifies from personal knowledge as to the inaccuracy of the returns. Hundreds of cases are known in which the papers, after having been left, were not again collected; and yet more numerous are the cases in which no effort whatever was made to obtain information. This is not the way to make a census.

The continued and successful holding out of Metz, Strasbourg and Toul is almost as remarkable as the thorough collapse which the French Armies have suffered in the field. In 1793 the siege of Thionville occupied the Prussians for two months, and was abandoned after all. CARNOT wrote, for the first revolutionary epoch, a book on the defense of fortified places, in which he laid it down as a first principle that "every soldier charged with the defense of a fortress should resolve to perish rather than surrender." Degenerate as the Frenchmen of today may in some respects be, when compared with their grandfathers, they have evidently not forgotten this maxim.

"This fearfully, constantly-increasing and ever-to-be-regretted era of crime," as Judge BARNARD calls it, deserves all the adjectives that can be heaped upon it, from the Bench or elsewhere. It is questionable, however, if the Judge's analysis of its causes was quite as copious as his description of it. Unlike Falstaff, he does not appear to consider the breed of scoundrels as "the cankers of a calm world and a long peace." On the contrary, it is, according to Judge BARNARD, a long war that has given the present generation its superabundance of vagabonds. Without attempting to decide where authorities conflict, we would suggest that slow-footed justice has had something to do with the phenomenon. Now that some disposition is manifest to make punishment swift and certain on the heels of crime, we may escape the dreadful necessity apprehended by Judge BARNARD of requiring a generation to weed out our surplus of rascality.

The position assumed by our Government, with reference to the European belligerents, is, as defined by the latest explanations, in perfect harmony with the foreign policy indicated by the founders of this Republic, and adopted as best suited to our position in the civilized world. The danger of our intervention in European quarrels furnishing a pretext for interference in our affairs on the part of the Governments of the Old World, is one which it has been our consistent practice to avoid, and which the President's dispatch to the Prussian Government in no way incurs. In the van of the free institutions of the world, we should be untrue to the obligations which such a position entails, did we not show our readiness to negotiate on behalf of justice and humanity. Since our Government only tenders its good offices subject to the joint invitation of the contending Powers, and declines to afford the slightest solace to a charge of European alliance, the most hypercritical will scarcely find cause for nothing but satisfaction with the course pursued.

Our Irish fellow-citizens have selected the proper time for giving expression to their ancient and long-standing sympathy with their brother Celts of France. Now that there is no need to discriminate between the dynasty of NAPOLEON and the French people, every friend of Republican institutions may, without misgiving, swell the current of sympathy that every day sets more powerfully toward the new Democratic régime in France. The copious eloquence of last evening probably enabled the meeting to dispense with the aid of music in adding to their enthusiasm, and the abrupt exit of the musicians may thus have been unnoticed. But one is tempted to wonder whether the unimpassioned Teutons, whose patriotism revolted against the Marseillaise, were beguiled into the taste of the enemy, or whether they had made a compromise between principle and interest, which only failed to resist the supreme test of the revolutionary anthem.

We find in the Panama Star & Herald a word for the Spanish American Republics. With the trifling exception of the Provinces around the River Plate, where assassination and rebellion are still the prevailing types of political activity, and with a reservation on the score of Venezuela, which halts somewhat in the path of progress, our contemporary assures the world that the Spanish-speaking Republics show an evident intention "to behave better for the future." While it is highly satisfactory to learn that Peru and Bolivia are getting tired of fighting, and that the former is in the full tide of railway construction, while its neighbors, on the Pacific side of the Andes, at least, are emerging from a chronic state of social chaos, we can scarcely expect very much from the very cautious valetudinarian of the Panama journal. Our wonder would have been greater had the possibility of a worse state of things been announced than has existed, of late years, in South America.

LOTTA AT NIBLO'S.

The setting in of the Fall dramatic season brings before audiences an almost unvarying number of familiar faces. Many are given a general welcome, the charm of others is debated, a few are recognized because pleasant to that majority of jurors called the public. It is an easy task to greet the former. Genius, talent, and industry are themes of perennial freshness, and estimates of the excellencies of Mr. JEFFERSON's and Mr. BOOTH's acting, and of the beauties of voice and style of a Patti and a Nilsson suggest and bear much refashioning. It is not an ungrateful labor, either, to seek for traits of interest, the detection of which is claimed elsewhere. Discovery is not always achieved, it is true, but an investigation sheds light upon the qualities of its subject. When it becomes necessary, however, to strive to account for an influence to the elements of which a hundred examinations have failed to give substance, the nature of the duty is changed. A great actor's rehearsal of the story of "Rip Van Winkle" will generate a score of essays from one pen. A portraiture of "Firefly" by a bright and pretty girl will make a single one impossible. In the case of Miss LOTTA, criticism, once unsuccessfully attempted, remains unaccomplished. Her popularity is not a thing for discussion, but a matter of fact. Nothing is more real than the little lady's hold upon the playgoer's friendship, and nothing more intangible than the power governing it. Proof to this effect was again afforded at Niblo's last evening, and again was the inquiring mind confused beyond hope of illumination. Miss LOTTA is still young, vivacious and confident of self. Happily for her prosperity, a childlike countenance and form, a tuneful voice and a merry laugh are still here. VICTOR HUGO, in a comparison drawn somewhere between lively children and kittens, regrets that out of the grace and playfulness of both should only come, as a rule, the solemn stupidity of the full-grown puss. No consequence of the kind prompts our sorrow as yet, in the case of Miss LOTTA, but we cannot dispel an apprehension that ultimately the comparison may be borne out. The heroine of "Heartsease," though, appears still unconcerned as to the future, and so the difficulty of writing of her continues to be as great as ever. There is, therefore, now to be offered the bare chronicle only of the satisfactory results of her performance. They were of the habitual order. A very large audience occupied the theatre, and united in a cordial reception at the outset. Laughter and applause—the technical but unavoidable words—were frequent during the entertainment, and recalls followed the fall of the curtain at the close of each act. The drama, a new one here, is from the pen of Mr. EDMUND FALCONER. It embodies a simple story, the conclusion of which can be seen from the first. This is divided into a prologue and three acts, each portion culminating in an impressive picture. Briefly, it runs thus: Charles Vallery, being ruined, is urged to go to California to retrieve his fortunes. The advice comes from the family of his wife, and is heeded by Vallery, who is next met in El Dorado with May Wylderose, his blithe and bonny daughter. While in the Golden State May becomes enamored of Lionel Houghton, an adventurer like her father, and unknown to her, though in reality her cousin. All sorts of adventures tread upon the heels of this event. May, swinging across a gulch by means of a rope—as in the cave in "Colleen Bawn"—saves Lionel's life. Then, at a later day, May unearths a nugget of prodigious size, and routs the robbers who would despoil her of it. Finally the scene is shifted to England, where the miners don evening dress, and the singing by the May of the Mountains in homespun, is repeated by metropolitan May in robes of richest sheen. Needless to add that a marriage is the material of the closing tableau. During the progress of the drama a banjo solo is performed and a clog dance is danced, both deeds being done last night amid endless demonstrations of approval. The gayety and archness of Miss LOTTA afforded throughout unbounded delight. A Yankee from the ordinary mould, Hiram Doolittle by name, added, we must mention, to the amusement of the evening. Mr. VINING BOWERS fills the part. Mr. FRANK LAWLOR is Vallery, and Mr. THEODORE HAMILTON, Lionel. The remaining characters are assumed by Messrs. FITZGERALD, E. B. HOLMES, FLEMING and RIDDLE, and by Mrs. SKERRETT, and Misses RUSSIE DUDLOW and VIRGINIA BOUGHAUGH. Let us not omit to notice that the scenery from the brush of Mr. VOEGLIN is altogether new, and that, in a word, no pains have been spared to make "Heartsease" worthy of a permanent success. The engagement of Miss LOTTA, at Niblo's, extends over six weeks.

Reopening of the Children's Aid Society Industrial Schools.

The industrial schools of the Children's Aid Society were reopened yesterday, after a Summer vacation of seven weeks. This Society, which commenced its operations on a small scale some eighteen years ago, in a destitute section of the First Ward, has become one of the largest and most useful of our benevolent organizations. Its schools are now planted in almost every locality where poverty and ragged children abound, from the crowded tenements of the First Ward to the "squatters" shanties of "Dutch Hill" and "Mackerelville." At those schools from 3,000 to 4,000 poor children, unfit to attend the public schools, are daily educated, and partly clothed, and fed. Most of the schools re-opened with a full attendance of scholars, delighted to look again upon the friendly faces of their faithful teachers.

During vacation the schools have been thoroughly cleaned and repaired. The teachers return to their work full of new life and vigor. Mr. BRACE, the efficient Secretary, is again busy in the executive chair at the Central Office in Fourth-street; and, altogether, reopening day presents a wide and fruitful field of benevolent labor, surrounded by a corps of efficient and devoted laborers.

THE GERMANS FOR WOODFORD.

Grand Ratification Meeting at the Twenty-Second Ward Wigwam.

An Enthusiastic Demonstration—Addresses by Sigmund Kaufman, Gen. Sharpe and Others—The Proceedings of the Saratoga Convention Indorsed.

In pursuance of a call previously published in the German local papers, the Germans of the Twenty-second Ward, without distinction of party, last night, held an immense mass-meeting at the large hall in Forty-ninth-street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, called the Wigwam. The hall was filled by a vast audience long before the proceedings were commenced.

At about 8½ o'clock the meeting was called to order, and Mr. M. ELLINGER was called upon to preside. In a brief speech he demonstrated that the Germans of this district now have an opportunity to throw off their party shackles, which for years have divided them. For years, he said, the German citizens of the district have been divided in two factions, both tools of the leading parties. United united in the approaching campaign would insure to the Germans success. He made a graceful allusion to Gen. SIGEL and Senator SCHURZ, and their names were greeted with loud applause. At this stage of the proceedings, a procession of citizens, headed by a band of music, appeared in the hall. The committee of the speakers of the evening, who took seats on the platform, amid enthusiastic demonstrations on the part of the audience. The speaker concluded by saying that they were now assembled not as Democrats nor as Republicans, but as German citizens, to unite in carrying out the principles that they believed to be just.

At this stage the Wiegand Männerchor sang a patriotic chorus, which again aroused the enthusiasm of the audience.

A list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries was then read and adopted, and the first speaker,

ADDRESS OF GEN. SHARPE.

Gen. GEORGE H. SHARPE, was introduced, who came forward amid the cheers of the auditory. Gen. SHARPE, in his introductory remarks, alluded to the fact that since the Germans had shed the sweet fraternity of the sword side with the Americans, the latter knew that the German heart belonged to them, and now the hearts of the Americans are with the Germans; now that the German nation abroad is struggling for its national unity since the war-cry of the French was raised "to the Rhine! to the Rhine!" Now let us strike hands as we struck them at Saratoga, where the strongest men that the Republican Party has produced for ten years were represented. The Germans must have strong men to acquire this confidence, and they, the Americans, know it. He believed that he should have been elected before "Tom" might say that in the temperance question we have made a mistake, but you should have remained with us and told us your grievances," and that would have brought the Republican Party to their senses. [Cheers.] They should have remained with them. He knew it was wrong to go to peaceable meetings and take respectable people quietly enjoying themselves by the strong arm of the law. But it did not require defeat to understand this, and he thought the true point had been reached to settle this matter. At the conclusion of the General's speech, the band played the famous national hymn, "What is the German's Fatherland."

RESOLUTIONS.

The Secretary, Mr. WM. LOEW, then read a series of resolutions, with a preamble, declaring that as by the glorious example shown by the Germans in Europe, it was demonstrated that by unity German influence will be strong, and that by unity they will be recognized as a people of culture, therefore it is the duty of the Germans in this country to unite with those elements of society which represent the progressive and cultured classes, but that no affiliation should be had with any party which will encroach upon our public school system, and endanger our free institutions, nor with any party which is prejudiced against the German element. That the nominees, STEWART L. WOODFORD and SIGMUND KAUFMAN for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor are indorsed, the latter as an acknowledgment to the German element and its interest.

It was further resolved that a campaign club for the Twenty-second Ward shall be permanently organized, not only for the present campaign, but to remain in operation hereafter.

These resolutions were adopted by an unanimous vote, whereupon the Männerchor chanted the now famous German war song, "Die Wacht am Rhein," with grand effect.

The Chairman now introduced the Republican candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. SIGMUND KAUFMAN, who, after a flattering introduction, said that the Americans have certainly cause to respect the Germans in this country, when it is remembered that they were the element which, for instance, subdued the rebellion in Missouri and saved that State for the Union. If they did not wish the State of New-York to be controlled any longer by a band of corruptionists, they must be united. If they wished honest elections, they should be firm in carrying out their principles. Why could not all venerable Germans, even if they for long years adhered to the Democratic Party, go with them in this move, and show the Americans that honesty with the Germans is the rule, and roguery the exception? He, the speaker, would never accept an election which had been secured by fraudulent means. Fraud should be guarded against, so that the votes of honest men should not be neutralized, but by united action there would be no doubt concerning the result of the campaign on the 8th of November. But another very important thing was to be considered. If in the cities of New-York and Brooklyn they would have honest elections, they should assist the authorities, and if this was not done, the apathy of the people in the interim would become so strong that all hope would vanish. The people in the interior, who have to go over long roads to their polling places, would finally abandon all efforts in that direction, if they see that they are of no effect, and that their votes are neutralized. The speaker concluded his remarks amid enthusiastic cheers.

The Wiegand Männerchor sang another patriotic war song.

It was announced that the Republican candidate for Governor, Gen. STEWART L. WOODFORD, was unable to be present during the evening, to address the meeting, he having been called away from the City by telegraph on important business.

The organization of the Campaign Club, it was announced, will take place on Saturday, when the names will be enrolled and the officers elected. The meeting then adjourned with cheers for the Republican ticket.

WOODFORD AND KAUFFMAN.

Grand Rally of the Great Club of the Twenty-first Assembly District—Speeches by Hon. Sigmund Kaufman, R. P. Allen, James Thompson, Mr. Barnett, Mr. Metcheson, and others.

The Twenty-first Assembly District Grant Club held an enthusiastic ratification meeting last evening at their head-quarters, corner of Third-avenue and One Hundred and Nineteenth-street. EDGAR KETCHUM, President of the Club, occupied the chair, and the hall was crowded with leading citizens and Republicans of the Twenty-first District. Mr. R. P. ALLEN presented a series of resolutions, heartily indorsing the State ticket nominated at Saratoga, and pledging the cordial co-operation of the Club in securing its triumphant election. The resolutions were unanimously adopted. The President then introduced as the first speaker, SIGMUND KAUFMAN, the Republican nominee for Lieutenant-Governor who briefly addressed the meeting.

SPEECH OF MR. KAUFMAN.

He said that the Fifteenth Amendment had secured equal rights to all men, and there was, therefore, no longer need of discussing the old question of Slavery or Anti-slavery. We could now bend our attention to the affairs of this State, so badly misgoverned by a party calling itself Democratic, but which was ruled by a few unprincipled men without character or education, who looked to their own aggrandisement and enrichment, and not to the public good. [Applause.] One of the chief questions at issue in this campaign was the purity of the ballot-box. It was for the Republican Party to guarantee to the people what they had not had for years past—a fair election. [Applause.] In their efforts to do this, he had no doubt they would meet the co-operation of all honest Democrats. The people were determined not to be any longer robbed of their franchise, and cheated out of their rights by fraudulent votes. [Applause.] If, under the law of Congress, we shall succeed in getting an honest election, we have not to fear the least doubt that the Republican Party would achieve a glorious triumph at the coming election. [Great applause.] The State of New-York, in its opinion, was and always had been overwhelmingly Republican, and this Fall it would roll up a larger majority than ever before. [Applause.] He believed we would this Fall receive the support of large number of people who had heretofore been misled into voting the Democratic ticket. The country vote would also come out in full strength this Fall if it could be secured of a fair vote in this City. It only required the good organization and a little energetic labor for the Republican Party to elect its ticket triumphantly, and plant its banner once more on the State Capitol. [Great cheering.]

SPEECH OF COL. M'LEOD MURPHY.

The Chairman then introduced Col. MCLEOD MURPHY, who addressed the meeting in a very witty speech, in which he gave some home thrusts to the chief Democratic Mayor JOHN SON and other public impostors. His remarks were received with boisterous laughter and applause.

SPEECH OF R. P. ALLEN.

Mr. HORATIO P. ALLEN next took the stand, and made an effective speech in behalf of Republican principles and the Republican ticket nominated at Saratoga. He exposed deception and ingratitude which the Democracy had practiced upon their German followers, and said he believed they had at last found out who were their true friends, and would hereafter be found voting the Republican ticket. He urged the necessity of vigilance and hard work to prevent fraudulent voting at the coming election, and secure an honest ballot. He hoped every Republican in the Twenty-first District would to work energetically for the success of the ticket. [Cheers.]

Gen. KARGE, [illegible] was next called upon and [illegible] bear one thing in mind. There were two Tammany Republicans in this City who did nothing but play second fiddle to Tweed, Sweeny & Co., and who co-operate with them in all their schemes for retaining power. These men must be put down—kicked out of the party. [Great applause.] He hoped every true Republican would watch these men, and use his influence to drive them from the party, where they are only spies into the ranks of the Democracy, where tools they are. [Great applause.]

Mr. BARNETT then addressed the meeting in German, [illegible] was followed by Mr. KETCHUM, President of the Club, who reviewed in a lucid and argumentative discourse the position of the two parties and the questions at issue in the approaching campaign.

The meeting closed with nine cheers for the ticket.

ORGANIZATION OF A WOODFORD AND KAUFMAN CAMPAIGN CLUB.

Immediately after the adjournment of the ratification meeting, another meeting was held in the hall to organize a Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Club. The meeting was called to order by Mr. JOHN A. ERMELSON, who was appointed temporary Chairman. An election of officers of the Campaign Club was then held, and WM. HAY, Jr., was unanimously elected permanent President; S. H. KNAPP and NELSON CRAWFORD, Vice-Presidents; WM. FORD and JAMES MCKENNEN, Secretaries, and JAMES M. THOMPSON, Treasurer. A standing committee of five was appointed by the Chair to represent the Club in conference with other campaign clubs throughout the City, and the meeting then adjourned.

THE BOYS IN BLUE.

Subsequently, an organization of the Boys in Blue was effected by JOS. MCDONALD, so that the Republican Party is now fully equipped and ready for action in the Twenty-first Assembly District, and they manifest a disposition to go into the fight determined to win.

Organization of a Soldiers' and Sailors' Campaign Club in the Seventh Assembly District—Resolutions and Speeches.

The soldiers and sailors residing in the Seventh Assembly District, met last evening at No. 750 Broadway, for the purpose of organizing a Woodford Campaign Club. There was a large attendance of the boys in blue, and the proceedings were harmonious and enthusiastic.

Col. A. J. H. DUGANNE called the assembly to order, and, after stating the object of the gathering, nominated Gen. ROBERT AVERY as temporary chairman, which nomination was agreed to.

Gen. AVERY thanked the meeting for the honor conferred on him, and urged unity of action among them as a sure means of success.

Lieut. HILTON was elected as temporary secretary.

Col. DUGANNE then offered the following resolutions, which were adopted nem. con.:

Resolved, That the soldiers and sailors of the Seventh Assembly District do hereby organize a club under the call of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Central Association, for campaign service, to be called the Woodford Soldiers' Club No. 7.

Resolved, That the nomination of a good soldier as the standard-bearer of the Republican Party in the Empire State is hailed by the soldiers of New-York as a fitting recognition of the men who periled their lives to preserve the Union.

Resolved, That the comrades in battle of STEWART L. WOODFORD will rally to his support in civil life, and march shoulder to shoulder in this campaign, until we reach, with our leader, the capitol at Albany.

Resolved, That we indorse the platforms of the Soldiers' and Republican Conventions at Saratoga, as we indorse the Administration of President GRANT at Washington, and will support them with fidelity and determination, which are the best assurance of victory.

Resolved, That the soldiers and sailors of the Seventh Assembly District, New-York, propose to work from this time forth, to the close of the election, with a united resolution to secure, if it is possible for men to do it, an honest vote and an honest count for every candidate in nomination.

A committee was then appointed to nominate permanent officers. While this Committee was out, Col. W. S. POOR, being called upon, addressed the meeting. He reviewed the course pursued by Gov. HOFFMAN since his elevation to the chief magistracy of the State, summing up his commendable acts as Governor by remarking that he had hanged JOHN REAL.

The Committee on Nominations then reported, through Col. DUGANNE, the following-named gentlemen as permanent officers of the Club, all of whom were elected unanimously by acclamation:

President, Brigadier-Gen. ROBERT AVERY; Vice-Presidents, Lieut.-Col. George E. Hall, Col. Walter S. Poor, Private Arch. Wind; Recording Secretary, Sergt. John A. Rudner; Corresponding Secretary, Major Thomas Elliott; Treasurer, Capt. Jno. S. Dingwall; Sergeant-at-Arms, Private John Jeffries.

Col. DUGANNE addressed the meeting briefly. It had been insinuated, he said, that it was the intention of the soldiers to carry the coming election by force. He could assure all who heard him that if force were necessary to prevent repeating at the polls, it would be used—under the sanction of the law, in all cases—but that no force would ever be used, with their sanction, to interfere with the rights of any honest Democratic voter. The soldiers would simply repel violence, if it be attempted, in defence of law. The men who bared their breasts to the enemy in defence of the Union, would unflinchingly oppose themselves to roughs and repeaters, if necessary, in defence of the purity of the ballot-box. What they wanted was peace, but not that peace which is apathy and will degenerate into slavishness. He counseled union and harmony in the ranks, and a determination to use every honest effort to achieve success, which he believed would be theirs in November next.

The meeting then adjourned until Monday evening next.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Central Committee—The Republican Nominations Indorsed.

A meeting of the delegates to the Central Committee of Soldiers and Sailors was held last evening at Room No. 24 Cooper Institute, Gen. H. E. DAVIES Jr., presiding. No business of importance was transacted, it having been previously announced that the business anticipated would not be brought up till Friday evening next.

The following resolutions, presented by Col. BELL, were unanimously adopted, after which the Committee adjourned to meet on Friday evening next, at the same place:

Resolved, That we recognize in the action of the late Republican Convention at Saratoga a determined purpose to maintain and support the fundamental principles of the Republican Institutions in its full, loyal and patriotic endorsement of the Administration of Gen. GRANT, and we cordially accept the nomination of STEWART L. WOODFORD to the office of Governor, as the highest evidence that this great State will, by a large majority, confirm their choice, in the remembrance of the services of the gallant soldiers that marched to the front from this State, to battle in the hard-fought contest for national unity.

Resolved, That the nomination of SIGMUND KAUFMAN to the office of Lieutenant-Governor by the late Republican Convention, at Saratoga, meets the hearty approval of the soldiers and sailors of this State as eminently wise, sagacious and just, in recognizing the merits and services of a distinguished German, who, in common with his countrymen, acted in the field as well as in council to maintain our grand Republic against all our foes from within or without.

Resolved, That we believe a proper Republican Government should provide for the protection of the greatest possible liberty consistent with justice to others and good order. We therefore deprecate and condemn the many acts of special legislation, with which this State has been cursed, by the Democratic Party, as instituting upon the rights and liberties of the people by creating powerful monopolies, invested with great and valuable privileges, which have been and are now used to control the legislation, and bending them to deprive the people of their just prerogatives and many of the permanent control of the Government.

Resolved, That we as soldiers who stood in the front down, by force of arms, the great and terrible monopoly of slavery, for the preservation of Republican institutions, are opposed and execrate legislation, all political monopolies, whether by legislation or otherwise, and we, in this, only as we plead equally to us we all lawful rights to come to every citizen a single vote when he is entitled to it, and not one; and we pronounce as enemies to our Republic all men who attempt to prevent, by repeating at the polls to obtain power and office through fraud and intimidation.

Resolved, As the Germans are making common cause with the citizens and soldiers in this campaign, that the Union recognized by this Committee will be known as the Woodford and Kaufman Soldiers' and Sailors' Club.

More Woodford and Kaufman Clubs.

At a meeting of the Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Club of the Sixth Assembly District, held at their rooms, No. 401 Grand-street, last evening, the following gentlemen were elected officers: HUGH NESBITT, President; FRANCIS SUTTER and STEPHEN HOLDEN, Vice-Presidents; ISAAC M. LAWRENCE and WILLIAM GRAHAM, Secretaries; JOHN H. DURNBERRY, Treasurer.

At a meeting of the Republicans of the Twentieth Assembly District, last Saturday evening, a Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Club was organized by the election of JAMES GORDON, Esq., as President; CHRISTIAN SCHWARTZ and GEO. P. MCGARRY as Vice-Presidents; H. C. BAIN as Secretary, and WALTER S. PINCKNEY as Treasurer.

At a meeting of the Republicans of the Ninth Assembly District, Saturday night, a Woodford and Kaufman Club was organized, with the following officers: GEORGE LAYLAND, President; EDWARD TAYLOR and THOMAS COPPINS, Jr., Vice-Presidents; SAMUEL S. LANE and HENRY O. PETTY, Secretaries, and JAMES W. FARR, Treasurer.

Eighteenth Assembly District Republican Association.

The Eighteenth Assembly District Republican Association met last evening in No. 458 Fourth-avenue, and after listening to an address by Col. KELLY, the delegate to the State Convention, indorsed the nominations of that body, and adopted the platform and resolutions. Thirty new members were admitted and twenty-five propositions for membership were received. A committee, consisting of Messrs. STRAWBRIDGE, COACHMAN and KELLY, was appointed to nominate inspectors of election, and a committee of fifteen was appointed, also, to organize Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Clubs in the district.

NEW-YORK STATE.

The Congressional Districts—Nominations Made and to be Made—The Prospects.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT.—In the Eleventh Congressional District ED. M. MADDEN, it is said, will be likely to receive the Republican nomination, instead of Gen. VAN WYCK. Mr. GEO. W. GERRY will probably be nominated by the Democracy.

TWELFTH DISTRICT.—JOHN H. KETCHAM, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Twelfth District, will probably be re-elected.

FIFTEENTH DISTRICT.—J. L. DAVIS is strongly urged for the Republican Congressional nomination in the Fifteenth District by the Rensselaer delegates, but he is not favored generally in the district.

SIXTEENTH DISTRICT.—The Republicans are divided in the Sixteenth District, and unless they can effect to work together a Democratic triumph will be the result.

SEVENTEENTH DISTRICT.—W. A. WHEELER is the nominee of the Republicans in the Seventeenth Congressional District.

EIGHTEENTH DISTRICT.—Mr. HATHORN, of Saratoga, will probably be the successful Republican candidate for Congress in the Eighteenth District. The differences which have heretofore operated against the success of the party in this district are being healed.

NINETEENTH DISTRICT.—In the Nineteenth Congressional District E. H. PERSELS will probably be the Republican candidate.

TWENTIETH DISTRICT.—In the Twentieth District G. L. MERRIAM and L. M. BAGLEY are looking for the Republican nomination. There is danger of a split, but it is to be hoped matters may be arranged before it is too late.

TWENTY-FIRST DISTRICT.—E. H. ROBERTS, of the Utica Herald, is favorably spoken of in connection with the Republican nomination in the Twenty-first District. ALEX. H. BAILEY is the present representative.

TWENTY-SECOND DISTRICT.—In the Twenty-second District it seems that JOHN C. CHEROMIS is to be succeeded by Gen. LAMBERT as the Republican candidate.

TWENTY-THIRD DISTRICT.—In the Twenty-third District E. H. DURELL has been put forward by his friends for the Republican nomination. DENNIS MCCARTHY, the present Representative, may probably be renominated.

TWENTY-SIXTH DISTRICT.—GILBERT W. HOTCHKISS, the present Representative from the Twenty-sixth Congressional District, will probably be renominated by the Republicans. Mr. M. GOODRICH, of Dryden, is a candidate.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DISTRICT.—In the Twenty-seventh District W. B. SMITH and Ex-Senator HATT are candidates for the Republican nomination. HAMILTON WARD, the present incumbent, expects to be renominated.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DISTRICT.—Two nominations are to be made in the Twenty-eighth Congressional District—one to fill the unexpired term of Hon. NOAH DAVIS, and another for the full term.

THIRTIETH DISTRICT.—There will be a lively contest in the Thirtieth District. The Republicans expect to elect their man, to succeed Mr. D. S. BENNETT, the present Representative, who is a Democrat.

THIRTY-FIRST DISTRICT.—The Thirty-first District is in doubt. The present Representative is FORTER SHELDON, a Republican, but, as there are other gentlemen ambitious for the seat, he may not be renominated.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Formal Acceptance of the Nomination of the Labor Reform Party.

BOSTON, Sept. 12.—WENDELL PHILLIPS accepts the Labor Reform nomination for Governor, in the following letter:

"I have no wish to be Governor of Massachusetts, and flattering as is this confidence, I thoroughly dislike to have my name drawn into party politics, for I believe in the political morality. But I see nothing in your platform from which I dissent, and the struggle which underlies your movement has my fullest and heartiest sympathy. Capital and labor are partners, not enemies. They stand face to face in order to bring about a fair division of the common profit. I am fully convinced that hitherto legislation has leaned too much—leaned most unfairly, to the side of capital. Hereafter we should be impartial, the law should do all it could to give the masses more leisure, a more complete education, better opportunities and a fair share of profits. It is a shame to our christianity and civilization for our social system to provide and expect that one man at seventy years of age should be lord of many thousands of dollars, while hundreds of other men, who have made as good use of their talents and opportunities, lean in charity for their daily bread. Of course there must be irregularities, but the best minds and hearts of the land should give themselves to the work of changing this gross injustice, this appalling inequality. I feel sure that the readiest way to turn public thought and effort into this channel is for the working men to organize a political party. No social question ever got fairly treated here till we make politics turn on it. The real American college is the ballot-box, and on questions like these a political party is the surest and readiest, if not the only way, to stir discussion and secure improvement. If my name will strengthen your movement, you are welcome to it. Allow me to add, though working for a large vote, if we fail, we should not be discouraged by a small one. Last year's experience shows our strength, and the anti-slavery movement proves how quickly a correct principle wins success, if honest men work for it.

Yours truly,

(Signed,) WENDELL PHILLIPS.

GENERAL NOTES.

J. P. MCCOLLUM, of Montrose, Susquehanna County, has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Eighth Pennsylvania District.

The Republican majority in Vermont is estimated, from the returns so far received, to be 22,000.

ENEAS FITZPATRICK, of Hudson City, N. J., has been put in nomination for Congress by a portion of the delegates to the late Democratic Convention.

Mr. STEPHEN J. JACKSON, of Rockaway, Morris County, announces himself as an independent candidate for Congress in the Fourth District. The Newark Courier doesn't know the gentleman.

A telegram has been received at Rock Island from P. L. CARLE, who is now visiting in Scotland, accepting the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Fourth District of Illinois.

The Lebanon (Penn.) Courier says RICHARD J. HALDEMAN is to be the Democratic candidate for Congress in the York District after all. The Democracy did not want him, but his presented arguments in behalf of his nomination that were irresistible.

The statement that at the city election in Wilmington, Del., the whole Democratic ticket was elected is corrected by later returns. The Republicans elected the City Treasurer, and carried five wards out of nine. The President of the City Council, a Democrat, was elected on a local issue.

The Pittsburg Commercial says: "Mr. TAYLOR having declined the canvass for Congress in the Twenty-first Congressional District, the conferees representing the City Committee met and placed in nomination Hon. ANDREW STEWART, of Uniontown. It is understood that Mr. STEWART will accept, and, so far as possible, give the canvass his personal attention."

CORNELIUS WALSH, of Newark, having been mentioned as the probable nominee of the Democracy for United States Senator from New-Jersey, the Newark Journal says: "Hold on there. CORNELIUS hasn't yet joined the Democratic campaign club in his ward, nor made his confession of a sound political faith. He is quite a clever fellow, and if he comes into the Democratic Party we are muzzled that it will be a square conversion."

"In the Fifth (New-Jersey) District," says the Newark Advertiser, "the nomination will probably be between Gen. HALSTEAD and MATTHEW ARMSTRONG. The former gentleman is better known in Newark, where the Republican majority must come from, and from his extensive business connections and personal charities has many friends outside of the party ranks. Mr. ARMSTRONG is better known in Hudson through his large charities and estimable character."

The Detroit Tribune says that three successive Democratic County Treasurers in Hancock County, Ohio, have proved defaulters, the last one having just absconded, his accounts showing a defalcation of over $30,000. In the same county the last Democratic Sheriff was a defaulter in the amount of $6,000. Doubtless, the Democrats of Hancock County affect to be incensed at the alleged corruption of the Republican Party.

To-morrow, 14th inst., the Labor Reform Party will meet in Convention at Saratoga. The Democratic State Convention will assemble at Nashville, Tenn. A Republican County Convention, to nominate candidates for County Clerk, Sheriff, and other officers, will be held at Canton, in this State. A Congressional Convention will be held in the Third District of Michigan, and the Democrats of Illinois will hold their State Convention at Springfield.

On the 15th inst. the Democrats of the Second Minnesota Congressional District will assemble in Convention at St. Paul and nominate a candidate. The Democrats will nominate a candidate from the Fifth Maryland Congressional District. One member of the State Board of Equalization will be nominated at Toledo, Ohio. The Republicans of the Fifth New-Jersey Congressional District will nominate a candidate at Bergen City. The Democrats in the Fourth Maryland Congressional District will nominate a candidate at Frederick City. The Democrats will nominate a candidate for Congress in the Fifth District of the same State.

The Philadelphia Press says: "In the Nineteenth District of this State, now represented by Hon. GLENNI W. SCOFIELD, who has been renominated for another term, a disorganizing element is at work, headed by MONROE B. LOWRY. Notwithstanding that the convention, by a unanimous ballot, the district voted unanimously for the renomination of Judge SCOFIELD, and that the people of the district cordially indorsed their action, Mr. LOWRY is actively at work endeavoring to foist himself upon the party as an independent candidate. He can count on the support of the colored voters have met with a stern rebuke from their two leading men in the district.

MAINE

The State Election—The Returns from Various Towns—Prospect of a Great Republican Victory.

LEWISTON, Me., Sept. 12—Noon.—The vote of Lewiston, up to this hour, is larger than last year. The Democrats are bringing out every voter. The Republicans generally support PARKER for Governor, and FESS for Congress, but are much divided on the State Senator and Representatives to the Legislature. The Chamberlain Republicans are, to a great extent, voting for the Democratic candidate for State Senator. In Auburn, the Democrats, the Chamberlain Republicans and Labor Reformers generally unite on a candidate or Representative opposed to the Republican candidate.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 12.—Lewiston gives Roberts, (Democratic,) for Governor, 78 majority, and elects two Democratic Representatives. Auburn gives Parham, (Republican,) 102 majority, and elects Republican Representatives.

Portland gives Perham 2,153, Roberts 1,724, against last year's Chamberlain (Rep.) 1,614, Smith (Dem.) 668; and Hitchman (Temperance) 128.

Westbrook gives Perham 367, Roberts 540, against last year's Chamberlain 370, Smith 326, Hitchman 36.

Bethel gives Perham 128, Roberts 223—against last year's, Chamberlain, 204; Smith, 110; Hitchman, 14.

Gorham gives Perham 358, Roberts 262—against last year's, Chamberlain, 330; Smith, 291; Hitchman, 17.

Six towns sum up: Perham, 4,329; Roberts, 3,397, against Chamberlain last year, 3,363; Smith, 2,195; Hitchman, 236—being 172 Republican majority against 269 last year, a net loss of 107, or about one-fifth.

Rockland gives Perham, 830; Roberts, 520—a gain of 162 over the Republican majority of last year. The Democrats have probably elected the county ticket by a small majority.

All but four towns in Androscoggin give Perham, (Rep.,) 2,317, and Roberts, (Dem.,) 2,027. Last year the same towns gave Chamberlain 2,199, Hitchborn 481 and Smith 1,475. In those towns Garcelon, (Chamberlain, Dem.,) has 134 majority over Holland, (Morrill Rep.) Remaining towns gave Roberts 505 (Rep.) majority last year. Six Republican representatives favoring Morrill for United States Senator, and two Democrats are elected. One hundred and ten towns give Perham (Rep.) 23,759, Roberts (Dem.) 18,869; Republican majority, 5,090; against last year, Chamberlain, (Rep.,) 23,167; Smith, (Dem.,) 15,824; Hitchborn, (Temperance,) 2,321; Republican majority then, 4,943; showing that the Republicans will hold their own. Lynch is undoubtedly elected in the First, which was the only doubtful district.

BANGOR, Me., Sept. 12.—The election in this city passed off very quietly. The result exceeds the anticipation of the most sanguine Democrats or fearful Republicans. Gen. ROBERTS and MARCELLUS EMERY are the first Democrats who ever received a majority of votes in this city for the offices of Governor and Representative to Congress. Though the city is lost the Republican county ticket is undoubtedly elected in full. The Democrats had a jollification meeting this evening.

The following towns are given, with gains estimated by taking last year's majority over both candidates. The temperance vote, however, is practically added to the Republican vote this year:

Waldsboro—Perham, 180; Roberts, 610. Democratic gain, 507.

Bangor—Perham, 1,074; Roberts, 1,075. Democratic gain, 667.

Bucksport—Perham, 267; Roberts, 293. Democratic gain, 4.

Orono—Perham, 249; Roberts, 128. Democratic gain, 12.

Hermon—Perham, 252; Roberts, 106. Democratic gain, 26.

Hampden—Perham, 261; Roberts, 208. Republican gain, 26.

Calais—Perham, 404; Roberts, 170. Republican gain, 73.

Pembroke—Perham, 164; Roberts, 142. Democratic gain, 69.

Wesscasset—Perham, 176; Roberts, 321. Democratic gain, 36.

Waterville—Perham, 526; Roberts, 229. Last years' Republican, 269; Democratic, 205; Temperance, 159.

Fairfield—Perham, 250; Roberts, 196. Republican gain, 10.

Paris—Perham, 247; Roberts, 354; last year, Rep., 307; Dem., 159; Temperance, 28. Democratic gain, 28.

Winthrop—Perham, 207; Roberts, 196; Rep. gain, 80.

Farmington—Perham, 400; Roberts, 240; Rep. gain, 71.

Wilton—Perham, 214; Roberts, 99. Republican gain, 40.

Lewiston—Perham, 629; Roberts, 669. Democratic gain, 406.

Rumford—Perham, 238; Roberts, 169. Republican gain, 14.

Greenwood—Perham, 69; Roberts, 113. Democratic gain, 80.

New-Gloucester—Perham, 172; Roberts, 118. Democratic gain, 68.

Cape Elizabeth—Perham, 307; Roberts, 229. Last year—Republican, 234; Democratic, 196; Temperance, 3.

Buxton—Perham, 816; Roberts, 253. Democratic gain, 12.

Skowhegan—Perham, 461; Roberts, 194. Republican gain.

Belfast—Perham, 456; Roberts, 326. Democratic gain, 22.

Winterport—Perham, 321; Roberts, 153. Democratic gain, 69.

Camden—Perham, 339; Roberts, 379; Democratic gain, 7.

Thomaston—Perham, 157; Roberts, 325; Democratic gain, 94.

Biddeford—Perham, 488; Roberts, 652; Democratic gain.

Biddeford, the home of Hence Democratic candidate for Congress from the First District, gave, last year, Republican, 429; Democratic, 656; Temperance, 41. Same, ——, 456; 656, last year; Republican, 438; Democrat, 341; Temperance, 36.

Returns from 118 towns give Perham 24,451, and Roberts 20,198, against last year's Chamberlain, 24,669; Smith, (Dem.,) 17,069; Hinchborn, (Temperance,) 2,488. The Republican majority this year, 4,253, against 5,072 last year.

The temperance votes is mostly added to the Republican vote this year, by means of which their majority is slightly increased.

In the towns not heard from gave last year Chamberlain, 28,126; Smith, 22,429; Hichborn, 2,488; Republican majority, 3,209; so that Perham should at least have 4,538 majority. Last year the Republicans over both was 6,262. There is an increased total vote in the towns heard from of 1,400. The aggregate vote last year was 56,304. In the First District, we hear from twenty-eight towns, giving a majority of 1,371 for Lynch—a loss of six at 600 from the vote of 1868. The towns to be heard from gave in 1868 a majority of 400. The estimated majority is about 1,500. His majority in 1868 was 2,189. The Other district will also go up by a larger majority than this. The Legislature will probably be a trifle more Democratic than last year, and the Democratic have, perhaps, carried good majorities instead of two as last year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Twelfth Assembly District Republican Association—Complaints from Inspectors Concerning Regulations of the Mayor's Office.

The Twelfth Assembly District Republican Association held a special meeting last evening at the corner of Stanton and Chrystie streets, JACOB M. PATTERSON, Jr., President, in the chair.

The delegates to the Saratoga Convention reported their action there, especially as it related to the question of contested delegations. Mr. PATTERSON, the President, and one of the delegates, stated that the point they made in the Convention at Saratoga was one purely of regularity, they claiming that the former President, Mr. KNAPP, and his adherents, had been expelled the Association of the district, and that their delegates could be alone recognized as regular. After his statement of the case the delegates, he said, retired from the Convention, and in a few minutes they had the pleasure of being informed that they were recognized as the regular delegates. He did not mean it to be understood that Mr. KNAPP was charged with appropriating the money to his own use—none would think of charging that—the only charge was that he had not acted fit for the purpose directed by the Association. One good at least had been the result of the decision of the General Convention. It had cut at rest all disputes as to who were the recognized representatives of the party in the district.

Resolutions were read, approving the State nominations, and appointing a committee on patronage; also a committee to revise the roll of the Association, and other matters.

A further resolution was passed, requiring the Association into a Woodford and Kaufman Club.

Some of the appointed inspectors of elections reported that, after receiving notice of their appointment, they went to the Mayor's office to have them sworn in, and were informed that they need not be sworn in. They found a young man, who told them he had charge of the business, but that it was too soon; they had better come down again in a few days. In a few days they went down again, and were then told it was too late. It was generally agreed that this matter should be looked after.

After the adjournment of the Association, the campaign Club was organized by the election of LOUIS J. KIRK as President, DANIEL S. HIDDLE, First Vice-President; CHARLES L. CROMBET, Second Vice-President; WILLIAM GLASBE and HERMAN GRAMMER, Secretaries, and WALTER S. HILL, Treasurer.

A Finance Committee, consisting of five, and an Executive Committee, consisting of twenty, were also appointed, after which the meeting adjourned.

Delegates to the Fifth District New-Jersey Republican Convention.

The primary ward meetings to elect delegates to attend the Republican Congressional Convention for the Fifth District of New-Jersey, to be held at Bergen City, Thursday, were held in Newark last night. Eighty-seven delegates were chosen, and will go to the Convention not pledged to any particular candidate, but ready to vote for the man who shall seem to be the choice of the Convention. Several names have been mentioned as candidates, though none are urged either by the politicians or by the people. Ex-Gov. PARKER, for FRELINGHUYSEN would no doubt have been the choice of perhaps a majority, but he has declined having his name mentioned in connection with the office. Among other names mentioned are Ex-Gov. WARD, Maj. Gen. O. HALSTEAD, Myer RICORD, M. SERRING, Amerigus and perhaps others. These names are not mentioned by consent of the gentlemen, but merely as the choice of the men who bring them forward.

The Contest for the County Clerkship.

Another demonstration in favor of Hon. CHARLES E. LOEW for County Clerk took place Saturday evening at Busam's Hall, in Second-street. A "Charles E. Loew Campaign Club" was organized, and $2,000 immediately subscribed toward defraying election expenses. The meeting was addressed by Hon. HERVEY C. CALKINS, M. C., Hon. Justice KOCH, Hon. HENRY WOLTMAN and Hon. Wm. GOVER, the nominee for Coroner, who was loudly cheered, and is evidently a favorite with the Germans. Legislative candidates of Mr. LOEW's recommending his honesty and efficiency since he has been in office, were passed.

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

ITALY AND THE POPE.

Outbreaks Among the People—A Vote to be Taken on the Occupation of the Papal Territory—The King Urged to Make Rome the Capital.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—An outbreak is reported in the Province of Viterbo. The people surrounded the Papal Zouaves in their intrenchments at Viterbo, Montefiascone, and Valentano, and threatened to attack them. Order was restored in the name of the King of Italy.....The Daily Telegraph has a special dispatch, stating that an arrangement for the occupation of the Papal territory has been agreed to. A plebiscite is to be taken, by which the inhabitants are to decide for Pope or King as their civil ruler, the decision to be binding on both. In the meantime the Italian troops will hold the Roman territory until the voting is over, and if the result is adverse to the King, will withdraw..... The papal towns are sending petitions to the Italian Government for protection. Naples urges the King not to hesitate to make Rome the capital of the nation. The official journal of the Government at Florence justifies the occupation of the patrimony of St. Peter, maintaining that it is as necessary for the Pope as for Italy. The journal hopes the Pontiff will accept the guardianship of the Italian Government.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Advices from Florence are to the effect that the Italian troops enter Roman territory today. Italy's ultimatum substantially strips the Pope of his temporal power. The local authority of Italian territory, however, remains undisturbed by the Italians, and the Government announces its wish to concur with any Power in guaranteeing the independence of the Pontiff.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Further Accounts of the Loss of the Captain—Other Marine Disasters—A New Atlantic Cable Projected—Portuguese Affairs.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Her Majesty's steamship Incendiary brings news of the loss of the Captain. She reports that the Captain, before sailing, narrowly escaped destruction by fire. The packing of her feed-pipe ignited, and the fire had made considerable progress before it was discovered. It was extinguished with difficulty. During the gale one of her heavy guns got loosened from its fastenings in consequence of the tremendous rolling of the ship, and, suddenly swinging around, struck a gunner, killing him instantly. The Shipping Gazette demands a strict investigation. The British public should know how one of the staunchest vessels afloat foundered in weather which a collier might have ventured.....No tidings have been received of the ship wrecked last week on Goodwin Sands. Her cargo consisted of tobacco..... The James, bound from Bordeaux for Havana with a general cargo, took fire at sea and was scuttled.....A project for laying another telegraph cable to America is announced.

LISBON, Sept. 12.—The Count and Countess D'EU arrived yesterday in the steamer Rio Janeiro. They will leave immediately for Bordeaux.....The Duke of SALDENHA has started for London to fill the post of Ambassador

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

This week opens dull, so far as appearances at the Exchange indicated, yesterday. There were no sales, although the number of dealers assembled in the salesroom was far in excess of the crowds brought together during any day last week; a fact which shows that an increased interest is being taken in the state of the market, and that dealers are on the lookout for any chances that may offer. The bulletin boards, yesterday, contained no notices of offerings to be made today; but on Wednesday and Thursday next, unless holders adjourn the sales, there will be offered very desirable city property, located both in New-York and Brooklyn. Messrs. A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co. will sell improved property on Wednesday, situated in Tompkins-avenue, between Halsey and Hancock streets, Brooklyn. On Thursday, the same firm will dispose of improved property on Forty-sixth-street, near Fifth-avenue, in this City; Mr. B. P. Fairchild, for V. K. Stevenson, Son & Co., will offer vacant lots on Fifty-third-street, between Tenth and Eleventh avenues—now become desirable in consequence of the fact that the street has been sewered, and is about to be paved with Belgian pavement. Mr. Adrian H. Muller, of Muller, Wilkins & Co., has advertised to be sold, on the same day, valuable leasehold property on Duane and Reade streets, between Broadway and Church streets. Both lots have marble front stores thereon. It is anticipated that for all these offerings bidding will be brisk.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Immense Demonstration at the Cooper Institute.

The Hall Crowded to Overflowing—Strong Resolutions—Addresses by Daniel E. Lyddy, Gen. McMahon, William E. Robinson and Others—Great Enthusiasm.

Last evening an immense meeting, mostly composed of Irishmen, was held in the large hall of the Cooper Institute to give an expression of sympathy with the young Republic of France. Long before the hour appointed for the opening of the meeting an enormous mass of people filled all the seats and avenues in the hall, and when the chair was taken there was not a single inch of ground that did not contain an occupant. So great was the crowd that sought admittance that a great number had to remain outside, where they erected a temporary platform, and speeches were made and national anthems sung. A German band was engaged to perform at intervals during the proceedings, but on its refusing to render the "Marseillaise," at the vociferous call of the whole meeting, it was compelled to leave, but was permitted to withdraw without any serious manifestation. M. DANCHART, a Frenchman, sang the "Marseillaise" amid the most unbounded applause, which was again and again renewed. The whole proceedings were very enthusiastic, and terminated without the occurrence of any circumstance that would reflect discreditably on the purpose for which the assemblage was convened. At about 8 o'clock, Mr. DANIEL E. LYDDY, of the Irish Republic, was called to the chair.

Letters were read from JOHN MITCHEL and others, regretting their inability to attend, but expressing their sympathy with the object of the meeting.

ADDRESS OF MR. LYDDY.

The Chairman, in opening the meeting, said: This great meeting of the Irish citizens of New-York is assembled to rejoice at the establishment of a government formed in France by our true and old friends, the people of France. CARLYLE says that friendship, in the old heroic sense, is no longer to be found in the world. Not, perhaps, in his world of English soldiers and Scotch metaphysics. The crabbed philosopher seems to be entirely unacquainted with the higher phases of Irish character and the whole impulses of the Celtic heart. Friendship is the growth of intimate and honorable relations. Gratitude is its hand-maiden; you must not confound it with the whining thanks of the mendicant; it is the most royal offspring of the very flower of true manhood. Men are something more than animated machines, and, despite the material and militarian philosophies of time, gratitude is still a heroic necessity, not so much for our friends as for ourselves, that we may preserve the strictly of our moral natures, the honor of our country, and the dignity of our own manhood. What America is today to Ireland, the home and refuge of her expatriated sons, France was, two centuries ago, and up to the era of the American Revolution. If the conditions of the present time changed, and America ceased to be a refuge for the hunted, Ireland would cease to receive the sons of Ireland, and Irishmen's necessity to come here ceased likewise, would you think worthy of your respect the Irish race if they ceased to love America? I can answer for them. This, then, is our reason. Cease to wonder why we love France; that we mourn with her in her failures, and rejoice and are glad when success warms her into joy. We have a dual character; we are likewise American; we are proud of our national liberty, power and glory, it is our tribute of gratitude to the land and the countrymen of LAFAYETTE. As citizens of a republic, our sympathies are due to every people struggling for republican freedom. Our affection for France is a legitimate exception; it is the most ready to enter our hearts because it is France; it is France we love those who love us. But there is the question of right. Where is the right? Our American Republic holds its priceless liberty as a sacred trust, and is responsible for freedom in the world. A kingdom destroyed, there is removed an enemy of our institutions, a people enfranchised, a republic founded, is born into the national family an ally and friend. But is the Republic permanent? Our alliance can make it; and interest, duty and honor urges us to cast our lot with France. But the Prussians are in France as victors! They were before in Paris as masters, not France of the last three years, but Europe. The Prussians threaten to bombard Paris. That mother of genius and repository of art and culture subjected to a siege, and treasures of civilization stored there in trust for humanity rifled by the barbarous battalions of the invader! I cannot believe that Prussia will do this outrage against which we protest in the name of the entire human family. King WILLIAM, of Prussia, declared, on his entrance into France, that he warred not on the French people, but only NAPOLEON. He has NAPOLEON now, a prisoner; why does not the war stop? Or, is WILLIAM, like all kings, a liar and a thief? His conduct answers. He talks like a victor, and claims to dismember France, and transfer some of its towns and provinces to Prussia, as a guarantee of peace in the future. Europe and America can never consent that the people of these towns and provinces shall be handed over to a foreign subjection. In the name of the people's inalienable right to choose their own rulers, we emphatically protest against such outrage. The Republic with a free Press, and without standing armies, is the surest guarantee of liberty in France and peace in Europe. Of the German people I have not much to say. They were less than men if they had acted differently from what they have done, and if they had so acted they would have merited my contempt. Their idea of Germanic unity is a step in advance, though a small step. I cannot recognize the right of petty tyrants and bow down before powerful ones. Yet Germany accepts WILLIAM and BISMARCK. This Republic is the realization in politics of the morality of the Christian Gospel. Here races meet in a common fold. The underlying identity of their natures has been established despite the superficial differences, and narrow distinctions of race been absorbed and extended in the noble recognition of the common humanity of man. This is the hope of the peoples in the future, and makes possible the engine of liberty and peace in the world—the universal republic. The German have made material success; let them crown it with the nobler and higher moral triumph of destroying the last remnants of feudalism and Kingcraft, and declare Germany a republic. For France I have no fears. Her history justifies my confidence. She has thrice established a republic; it was heretofore impossible. The soul and genius of France, ambitioning too much, sought too ample a success, and tried to solve all difficulties and realize the ideal state. France tried to solve the social as well as the political problems. It was too soon. Our Republic has only yet solved the political problem. The world moves slowly; it is not yet ready for the solution of the social question. At this solemn hour in the destiny of France, when invading armies pollute her soil, and, amid the travail of freedom, red war's grim spirit has seized for its prey her noblest sons, we mourn them, for he was alike the child of Ireland and of France. Two nations owned him, and two peoples bend in sorrow o'er his grave. The Celtic race has had no poverty of heroic sons; but amid the brilliant host of brave and patriotic men who drew their swords in defense of gallant France, there was none whose war record is brighter nor whose heritage of glory is more highly prized by his country than Marshal MCMAHON; and he has fallen his deeds roll filled with glory, and his face to the foe. On the dull, cold earth, which holds the dead hero, fall tears of loving remembrance, and the ages still yearning for birth in the womb of time, will take their sons, and at his grave, and from his story, teach the lesson of the patriot soldier's life—how to save one's country. For the great services he has done France thanks him, and you and I are proud of these services, for he was of your race, and his undying fame reflects much of his lustre upon you. From the south the Alsatt of Napoleon France has escaped even by the hands of a foreign invading horde, and, the opportunity which so naturally arises in the progress of events, the Republic has been proclaimed amid the acclaim of the immense crowd from the Rhine to the Pyrenees. Sharing now the cheer and warmth which a republican sun sheds on the head of the gallant and fiery Frank, our recent predilections for the noble race find legitimate and unrestrained expression; while as citizens of this democratic republic, we unreservedly rejoice at the new birth of liberty; and with all our souls welcome the land of LAFAYETTE into the brotherhood of free nations.

The Chairman was loudly cheered during the delivery of his address.

ADDRESS OF GEN. M'MAHON.

Gen. M. T. MCMAHON, late U. S. Minister to Paraguay, then addressed the meeting. He considered that on the subject of the French Republic there could be but one sentiment, a sentiment of glad and earnest sympathy, manifested among all classes of American citizens. No event of the present century was so significant as that which they were met that night to celebrate, to all nations, but especially to those assembled among those that have waited, through weary years of hope, opposition, mistake, and blight that has darkened as a pall, to the very heart of Europe. A republic in France not born of the lawless and baptized in the blood of its sons, flowing in civil strife, sets forth to the world the promise of a speedy fulfillment of the glorious mission foretold for humanity when those united columns declared and established their independence. [Cheers.] The hopes of all the lovers of liberty were now centered in France. The will do for the Continent of Europe what the United States has done for this, not by war and oppression, but by moral force and example. On this broad Continent there could be no single ambition of monarchical servitude; in fifty years from today the union might be called of Europe. Then you and I, and those of our sons, or children's children, may, if we live, see the Republic will be born suddenly as it arose; that the treachery of leaders, or the machinations of royal houses, when the storm of war had passed, would render its existence as impossible. He stowed not in these apprehensions, but even if those threatening predictions were proved to be true, the effect of the great example will remain forever with the people, and in the hour of supreme peril will arise in their might, and the nation will again be triumphant. [Applause.] In this denial of the "divine right of kings," there was hope for them, whatever may be the issues of France, and they might reasonably hope that her career shall be as rapidly prosperous, and as glorious, and as permanent as our own. Far from looking for the failure of the Republic, he was prepared to welcome and rejoice in its birth, for the flame that has been kindled in Paris will light on by reflection the sacred altars of liberty, almost deserted, in other lands. It will give hope and courage to the patient watcher in Ireland, [applause,] and strengthen the heart and the hand of the fighting peasant in Cuba. [Cheers.] The right of the people to govern themselves was not granted by divine from the tyrant of Europe. France had proclaimed it, and monarchies should receive and listen, and be warned of what is to follow, and be advised the Government of the United States not to play the detective, as it had done for the tyrant monarchies of Europe in the suppression of freedom. He trusted that the cause of Cuba, which was identical with that of France and Ireland, may not be overlooked. [Cheers.] Why should not a republic be recognized in Cuba as well as in France? [Cheers.] The time may be at hand when they should have to demand for Ireland what was granted to Cuba. [Great applause.] Gen. MCMAHON proceeded at further length to argue on the necessity of our Government recognizing Cuban belligerency, and continued to say that the cause of republican liberty was the same all the world over. [Cheers.] As Germans, Frenchmen and Irishmen who testified their love for liberty by seeking the shores of the United States, their lot for better or for worse with the free people of America, they should advocate the right of men to govern themselves and control their own destiny. [Cheers.] The General concluded by calling for the sympathy of the American people for their republican brothers in expressing his conviction in the ultimate triumph of the Republic.

Mr. JOSEPH CLARKE next delivered an address, and read an original poem on the "French Republic," written for the occasion, which was received with great applause.

ADDRESS OF MR. ROBINSON.

Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON was the next speaker. He remarked that it might have been excusable in American citizens up to the present time to hesitate as to what side they were to take in the great European contest, but now that the Empire was dead (if it would be decent to speak of the dead for a moment, and he was no Republican to sympathize with King WILLIAM. He called to mind the conduct of the German people in 1848, when they forsworn allegiance to royalty, and he did not believe that any true German would revoke the principles then given on such a pretense as that of unfaithfulness, any questions connected with the war. He refuted the utterances of American journalists in pandering to their national prejudices and pride for the mere purpose of catching their votes, and agreed with the words of the poet, that the German's fatherland lay not in principalities or kingdoms, but where the universal German tongue was spoken. Was it their destiny to follow forever the footsteps of a tyrant and keep time to the music of a despot? Wherever oppression was to be laid low, and wherever the Germans raised their heads, there was their fatherland. With all the grievances which had befallen France he still believed her prospect was good. Strasbourg stands up though the Cathedral is in ruins. BAZAINE gallantly held Metz, and that old hero, whose ancestors were driven from Limerick by English oppression, defied yet, from a Paris in only the Marshal, a reinforcement as good as 100,000 fighting men. TROCHU held out, the people would hold out, and he trusted the darkest day that Paris had ever yet seen was passed, and the full moon of freedom might beam around her yet. He longed for the dawn of universal freedom, and hoped that in the general liberation his native land, ever struggling, would have an opportunity of striking a blow for that existence as a nation which nature intended she should occupy. In conclusion, he tendered his hearty sympathy and congratulations to the present to and the cause of the French Republic. [Cheers.]

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Addresses were also delivered by M. ARLOT, Gen. FLOY and others, after which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

First.—Irishmen by birth and citizens of this Democratic Republic, we hail with pleasure and pride the establishment of a Republic among our hereditary friends and allies, the people of France.

Second.—That we hail the French Republic as the pioneer in leading all the people of Europe into republican liberty, and we pledge to it our hearty sympathy and moral support.

Third.—That we have heretofore refrained through regard for the feelings of our German fellow-citizens from publicly expressing our friendship for the people of France, but we are tempted to decide and speak out in favor of the nation in favor of Republican liberty and against monarchical aggression on freedom.

Fourth.—That in the contest between Republican Freedom and monarchical Prussia we cannot hesitate to declare our entire sympathy for, and support of, the Republic, and we heartily desire the speedy downfall and defeat of its enemies.

Fifth.—That in the name of progress and a universal republic we invite the German people to throw off the yoke of King craft and crown their material success by the whole higher moral success of declaring themselves a republic.

Sixth.—That we pledge to President GRANT our hearty support for any wise attempt at mediation between France and Prussia, if such a course be adopted by the President and Congress
